Ives, possessed energy, activity, remarkable physical strength, a high moral tone of character, fervent piety and executive ability. Her honesty of purpose, her gentleness of spirit, and her large benevolence, gained her many kindly friends. Her birthplace has been renamed Mount Hermon. It forms the seat -of Mr. Dwight L. Moody's famous institution of learning. The name was changed from Grass Hill to Mount Hermon by Mr. Moody, when he or his co-workers became a purchaser of the property. The original farm houses of Ebenezer Field, 3d, and of his son, Rodolphus W. Field, are yet standing upon their early sites, and are used for purposes required by the institution. Ebenezer Field, 3d, became a purchaser of this large New England farm, when the locality now called Gill, was known as Northfield. At the marriage of his son, Rodolphus Wright Field, with Hannah Dwight Hollister, he set off from it eighty acres as a wedding gift to his son. There all of the children of Rodolphus Wright Field and Hannah Dwight Hollister were born. Leverett Joseph Ives, son of Joseph Ives and Sarah (Bishop), was born in West Springfield, Ireland Parish, Mass., Sept. 18, 1846. He died in East Orange, N. J., Sept. 20, 1876, aged seventy years and two day. The line of descent, paternally, of Leverett Joseph Ives, comes from William Ives, born 1607, a member of the New Haven colony, 1639, who arrived in America, 1635, a passenger on the ship Truelove, from London, Robert Dennis, master. He is recorded a signer on June 4, 1639, of the Fundamental Agreement of Guinnisprack, being likewise mentioned as one of "the sixty three original Free Planters of the colony of New Haven." He married Hannah -. Joseph Ives, son of William Ives and Hannah -, married J an. 2, 1672-3, Mary Yale, born April z6, r65o, daughter of Thomas Yale and Mary (Turner). Mary Turner was a daughter of Capt. Nathaniel Turner, a founder of the New Haven colony, and prominent otherwise in American colonial affairs. He was an original charter member of the ancient and honorable artillery company of Boston, being the twelfth signer upon its roll. Captain Turner, with Deputy Governor Thomas Gregson, were of that "godly company," who perished on the so-called Phantom ship, and each was an ancestor of Leverett Joseph Ives. Lieutenant and Deacon Samuel Ives, son of Joseph Ives and Mary (Yale), was born in New Haven, Conn., Nov. 6, 1677. He died there Nov. 24, 1726, aged fortynine years. He married Jan. 3, 1706, Ruth Atwater, born in New Haven, Dec. 3r, 1688, daughter of Jonathan Atwater and Ruth Peck. Ruth Peck being a daughter of Rev. Jeremiah Peck and Joanna (Kitchel). "Rev. Jeremiah Peck, in 1660, according to an act of the court, was established in the Hopkins collegiate grammar school of New Haven, and there taught the languages and science." Capt. Jonathan Ives, son of Deacon Samuel Ives and Ruth (Atwater), was born in New Haven, March 14, 1716.17. He married Feb. 19, 1737-8, Thankful Cooper, of New Haven, born April t1, 1721, daughter of Joseph Cooper, of New Haven. Capt. Jonathan Ives had four sons, all of whom are said to have served faithfully in the war of the Revolution. Jeremiah Ives, son of Capt. Jonathan Ives and Thankful Cooper, was born in New Haven, Nov. 19, 1738; married June 7, 1768, Hannah Bassett, born in New Haven (that portion now North Haven), Dec. 26, 1739, daughter of Abraham Bassett, of North Haven, and Mehitable (Street), of Wallingford. Joseph Ives, son of Jeremiah Ives and Hannah Bassett, was born in New Haven, Feb. 2, 1771; married Sarah Bishop, born in New Haven, Feb. 3, 1777, daughter of Isaac Bishop and Sarah (Macomber), both of New Haven. Joseph Ives and Sarah Bishop were the parents of Leverett Joseph Ives. In his maternal line, Leverett Joseph Ives descended from Deputy Governor James Bishop, a prominent member of the New Haven colony, through his son Deacon Samuel Bishop, Sr., and Mrs. Hannah (Talmadge), widow of Enos Talmage, daughter of Thorns Yale and Mary (Turner) (Mrs. Hannah (Yale) Bishop was a sister of Mary Yale, wife of Joseph Ives), whose son was Deacon Samuel Bishop, Jr., who married Abigail Atwater, daughter of Ebenezer Atwater and Abigail (Heaton), and had son Isaac Bishop, who married Sarah Macomber, and had daughter Sarah Bishop, who married Joseph Ives. Sarah Bishop and Joseph Ives were the parents of Leverett Joseph Ives. About the year 1833, Mr. Ives removed from Lodi, Cattaraugus county, N. Y., where he settled soon after marriage to Hamilton, in the Province of Ontario. In the spring of 1837, owing to the outbreak of the Canadian rebellion, being unwilling to swear allegiance to the British crown, he removed to Cleveland, 0., and in the following autumn became a resident of Akron, 0., where he lived twenty three years, acquiring prominence there in the drug trade. He identified himself largely in the interests of the growing young town, was energetic in promoting its early progress, and may be truly styled, as one of its pioneers. In z86o he removed to Chicago, Ill. After remaining in the West a number of years, he returned East, and settled in East Orange, N. J. He died at his residence there Sept. so, 1876, aged seventy years and two days. "He was honest and upright in his dealings with men; a good citizen, a kindly friend and neighbor, his manners were pleasing," he was full of hospitality, and a helper to the oppressed.

In politics he originally belonged to the Whig party. In 1848 he voted the Republican ticket, upholding anti-slavery, and ever after firmly adhered to those party lines. He was a personal friend of "Old John Brown, the martyr," and presented him with a rifle when he started on "his mission to Kansas." Ch.: z.

Res. 255 Hancock St., Brooklyn. Louis Bomeisler, the eldest son of Nathan Loebl Bomeisler and - (Heller), of Munich, Bavaria, was born in Munich, Nov. zs. 1790. Born of wealthy parents, who held a high position in the social ranks of the splendid Bavarian capital, Louis Bomeisler was reared in the midst of a refined and culti-, vated home environment, receiving therein rare privileges, bestowed with unbounded generosity. He was liberally educated, his early instruction and preparation for college being conducted under the watchful care of a capable private tutor, who accompanied his pupil upon an extended tour through Europe, visiting Russia, Poland, and Asia Minor. He completed his course of study at Heidelberg University, Heidelberg, Germany, excelling in the languages, seven of which he became master, and also in mathematics. At an early age he joined the allied forces of the French and Bavarians, under the Emperor Napoleon Bonaparte, and served as aide-de-camp to one of Napoleon's generals at the battles of Jena and Austerlitz. In 1815 he was decorated by King Louis XVIII. of France, at Paris, with the "Order of the Lily," which order was granted by the King to the National Guards of France, Mr. Bomeisler being a member of that organization. On Dec. 1. 1816, he was initiated into the order of Free Masons, at Paris. About 1818 he came to America, landing at Philadelphia, not however, with the intention of remaining, but being taken seriously ill with a fever, his attendant physician, Dr. Benjamin Rush, who became his life-long friend, induced him to make Philadelphia his permanent residence. On April 23, 1819, the Masonic records of Philadelphia, state, "Brother Louis Bomeisler was admitted to membership in Herman Lodge, No. 125, F. and A. M." On April 13, 1824, he took the oath of Freedom in Philadelphia. On May 15, 1824, he married Mrs. Elizabeth Murray, of Philadelphia, widow of George Murray, daughter of Col. Daniel McKaraher and Susanna (Dunwoody). Louis Bomeisler upon settling in Philadelphia became a shipping merchant. Having his place of business on Front street, adjoining that of Stephen Girard. Mr. Bomeisler was public-spirited, and largely indentified himself with some of Philadelphia's early interests. He was courteous, affable, refined and dignified, and may be said to have been one of "nature's noblemen." He died in the city of his adoption, Sept. 28, 1856, aged sixty-four years, ten months and sixteen days. Elizabeth McKaraher, the youngest child of Col. Daniel McKaraher and Susanna (Dunwoody), was born in Philadelphia Jan. 4, 1794. She married as her first husband, in Philadelphia, George Murray, son of John Murray, Jr., of Philadelphia, and Susan (Elton), of Burlington, N. J. They were members of the Society of Friends, called Quakers. He was a son of John Murray and Elizabeth, who belonged to the early Quaker Murray family of New York City, which has perpetuated the name in various localities of that great metropolis. The birth of Elizabeth McKaraher occurred in the southern part of the city of Philadelphia, then known as "Society Hill." She died, as the widow of Louis Bomeisler, in her native city, June 16, 1876, at the age of eighty-two years, six months, twelve days. She was a gentlewoman of rare ability, and of charming personality. Beloved in her home, she possessed, likewise, a large circle of friends. She inherited not only the beauty of her mother, but in addition, the strong, physical and mental qualities of her Scotch-Irish ancestors.

Col. Daniel McKaraher, born about 1751, in Londonderry, Ireland, came to America, landing in Philadelphia, perhaps shortly previous to 1777. In the Pennsylvania archives it is recorded that "on July 31, 1777, Daniel McCaracher took the oath of allegiance to the new government" He was an Irish patriot, and fled from his native land to escape persecution on account of his patriotism. In America he served in the Revolutionary war, and was one of the unfortunate sufferers at the siege of Valley Forge, who in departing therefrom left foot-prints of blood upon the frosty pathway along which they moved. He.was a devout member of the Third Presbyterian church, in Philadelphia, located at Fourth and Pine streets, which during the war of the Revolution. was used by the British soldiers as a stable for their horses. Upon his return home, at the close of the war, he ordered his church-pew rebuilt, at his own expense, it having continued in use among his descendants to the present generation. He married in Philadelphia, Mrs. Susanna Hamill. widow of William Hamill, daughter of John Dunwoody and Susanna (Cromwell). In his native city. Londonderry. he became a member of the order of Free Masons. The Masonic records of Philadelphia relate, concerning him, that "Brother Daniel McKaraher, a past master, was admitted to membership in lodge No. 9, F. and A. M.. in this city. Jan. 4, 1784, and was elected worshipful master of said lodge in 1794." He died at Philadelphia, Sept. 23, 1811, "in the sixtieth year of his age," as per his tombstone. He was buried with military and Masonic honors. His remains lie interred in the Third Presbyterian ground, at Fourth and Pine streets, Philadelphia. Upon his tombstone appears the military title of colonel, and surrounding it are Masonic emblems. He was not only an uncompromising Scotch Irish Presbyterian, but he embodied the unswerving characteristics of honor, uprightness and bravery. which mark that vigorous nation. Susanna Dunwoody, born at Fagg's Manor, Chester county, Pa., was a daughter of John Dunwoody (but one o originally) and Susanna (Cresswell). At the time of her marriage to Col. Daniel McKaraher, she was the widow of William Hamill, a native of the north of Ireland, a son of the Scotch-Irish race. She possessed great physical strength, and uncommon personal beauty. It being said of her that "she was the handsomest woman who went into Brandywine Manor meeting house." Her eldest brother, Dr. James Dunwoody, who removed shortly prior to the Revolutionary war, from Chester county, Pennsylvania, to the town of Sunbury, in Georgia, is an ancestor on the maternal side of Hon. Col. Theodore Roosevelt. governor of the state of New York. John Dunwoody was a native of Donegal, in the north of Ireland, and belonged to the sturdy, sterling Scotch-Irish race. Having received an education in his native land, he followed the occupation of a school master, at Fagg's Manor, in Chester county, Pennsylvania. He there married Susanna Cresswell, daughter of William Cresswell and Mary -- of Fagg's Manor. William Cresswell is mentioned as one of the earliest settlers of Fagg's Manor. The Cresswell family came from England prior to the middle of the eighteenth century. "They entered at the mouth of the Chesapeake Bay. landing high up," viz., at its head, "in Maryland." Some of them crossed the border into Pennsylvania, and settled in Chester county.

Louis Edwin Bomeisler, the only child of Edwin Louis Bomeisler and Helen Pomeroy (Ives), was born in Philadelphia, July 22, i862. At the age of five years he was admitted into the school of the DeUtschen Frien Gemeinde, in Philadelphia, of which Herr Friedrich Schunemann Pott, was director, continuing under German tuition until the age of eleven years, thus acquiring fluency in the German tongue. In 1873 his parents removed from Philadelphia to New York City, when he became a pupil of grammar school, No. 35, of which Prof. John A. Forbes was the well-known and able superintendent Among the branches of learning in which this young student excelled, was that of elocution, being called upon to give recitations in the evening schools of New York City. May 12, 1877, an interesting biographical sketch, together with a portrait of Louis ° Edwin Bomeisler appeared in Frank Leslie's magazine, entitled, "The Boys' and Girls' Weekly." in which he is mentioned as one of "the distinguished scholars of the New York schools." June 19, 1877, he was graduated from grammar school, No. 35, and in the following autumn entered the college of the city of New York, remaining there two years. In that institution he was the champion athlete of his class. In 1879 he took a course of study at the Commercial College, in New York, of Prof. S. S. Packard, upon leaving Columbia College School of Mines, where he pursued the special course in assaying. In September, 1886, he was admitted to the Law School of Columbia College, in New York, from which he was graduated in the class of 1888, with the degree of LL. B. He is a member of the law firm of Dill, Bomeisler lc Baldwin, having their offices at Nos. 27 and 29 Pine street,

New York. He is one of the best known after-dinner speakers in the city of New York. Being a prominent member of the Masonic order, he was initiated into the Acanthus Lodge. No. 719, F. and A. M., in Brooklyn, N. Y., Dec. 7. 1891; passed as a Fellow Craft, Feb. x , 892 ; raised as a Master Mason, Feb. 15, 1892; elected Senior Warden, Dec. i 6, x895; elected Master, Dec. 21, 1896; retired, Dec. so, 1897; elected trustee, Dec. 20, 1897; re-elected trustee, Dec. 19, 1898; retired Dec. 18, 1899. Jan. 31, 1899, he was admitted a member of the Mystic Shrine. Is a member of all the Scottish Rite bodies, and is a thirty-second degree Mason. He married June 11. ago. in Brooklyn, N. Y., Natalie Holliday Cantoni, born in Brooklyn. Aug. 6, 1869. The officiating clergyman being Rev. Charles Homer, rector of St James Protestant Episcopal church, in Brooklyn. She was a daughter of Salvatore Cantoni and Clarissa Douglass (Olsen). Natalie H. Cantoni was educated at the Adolph' Academy, in Brooklyn, and at the convent of St. Elizabeth, Madison, N. J. Taking at the latter institution, in June, 1888, "the Golden Crown of Honor," presented by Bishop Wigger of the diocese. It being the highest prize bestowed.

Salvatore Cantoni born in Venice, Italy, was a son of Leon Vita Cantoni and Rosa (Cesanna), Venetians by birth; but the ancestors of Rosa Cesanna were natives of Greece. Mr. Cantoni was decorated by King Humbert of Italy, with the order of the Crown of Italy, which bestows the title of chevalier with the rank of knight For a number of years he held the office of president of the Italian colony of the United States, performing honorably and creditably his duties in that position. He was a banker in New York City. He died suddenly, at Bay Shore, Long Island, N. Y., June 21, 1896. Clarissa Douglass Olsen, daughter of James William Olsen and Clarissa (Douglass), was born in New York City. James William Olsen, born in Chester, England, was a son of - Olsen, a native of Denmark, and - - (Mortimer), born in Chester, England. Mr. Olsen possessed remarkable intellectual ability, being offered the professorship of astronomy and mathematics in Rutgers College. He was a prominent politician in New York City, and belonged to the . Republican party. He was private secretary to Hon. A. Oakley Hall.

Clarissa Douglass, born in New York City, was a daughter of John Douglass and Mrs. Jane (Mikels). John Douglass was born in Scotland, but settled in Dublin, Ireland. Later he came to America, where, in New York City, he established himself in the linen trade. He was a Scotch Irish Protestant. Mrs. Jane Mikels, (born Jane Haynes), was at the time of her marriage to John Douglass the widow of Jacob Mikels, of New York City. He was her second husband. She married Jasper m., ad, Jacob Mikels; m. 3d, John Douglass.

add to the history of the Ives family. Two Ives families lived in the same County at the same time, one at Ives Grove, and the other at S. Grove. There is no documentation or family history

George Homer Ives - first child of Roland Jr., and Almira - was born. In the spring of 1837, Roland, Sr., and his son Stephen set out to explore Wisconsin Territory, recently formed from Northwest Territory.

A man named Joseph Call had cleared a small area of trees, and with the rolled logs constructed buildings in which he could service passing travelers. A two-story log house and a log barn sat in the midst of the small but dense forest of oak, walnut, and elm, which was bounded by extensive plains of low rolling hills.

Though the Ives had bought the land for raising livestock, they had also inherited a lively business. When the Ives assumed the role of innkeepers, customers changed the name of the stopover from Call's Grove, to Ives grove. Almira and Roland Jr. earned a reputation as generous, gracious hosts. With the gradual settlement of the southeastern corner of Wisconsin Territory, activity at Ives grove daily increased. To meet the increasing traffic, Roland, Jr., built an elegant new tavern. With oak and walnut timbers cut from the grove, he erected a long, three story building, roofed with white-oak shingles and topped with a brick chimney at each end. Five separate doorways opened from the ground floor, five glass-paned windows lit the second, and full verandahs graced both. A store, post office, restaurant, and saloon were located on the first floor, bedrooms on the second, and on the third, a "spring floor," used for dances, roller skating, and other socials. For children of the wilderness, such as George and Albert Ives, the advent of the new wood plank road provided a glorious spectacle. At peak season, the Grove Barns accommodated fifty teams at night. When every bedroom on the second story was full, Roland spread the dance hall with cots, considerately surrounding each with a small booth to afford privacy. Roland Jr. died, and the work at the Inn was too difficult for Almira. The date of the foreclosure on the Ives Grove Inn was March 30, 1861.

by Ruth E. Mather, and F.E. Boswell

In 1834, George Homer Ives - first child of Roland Jr., and Almira - was born under his grandfather's prosperous roof in a village cofounded by his distinguished great-grandfather.

But like David Ives, the two Roland's grew restless in the staid little community where they had been born and reared. In the spring of 1837, Roland, Sr., and his son Stephen set out to explore Wisconsin Territory, recently formed from Northwest Territory. A short distance from the southwest shore of Lake Michigan, they purchased a large farm. The original owner, Joseph Call, had purchased the land from the government for $1.25 an acre. George Homer Ives was three when his father uprooted the family and took them to join the grandfather and uncle in the new home. There were ten of them: George's grandfather; his three uncles Stephen, Homer, and Gideon; his two aunts Maria and Charlotte; his parents, Roland and Almira; himself; and his baby brother, Albert.

Though the Iveses had bought the land for raising livestock, they had also inherited a lively business. Joseph Call had cleared a small area of trees, and with the rolled logs constructed buildings in which he could service passing travelers. A two-story log house and a log barn sat in the midst of the small but dense forest of oak, walnut, and elm, which was bounded by extensive plains of low rolling hills. When the Iveses assumed the role of innkeepers, customers changed the name of the stopover from Call's Grove, to Ives grove.

Almira and Roland Jr. earned a reputation as generous, gracious hosts. One early traveler long remembered the warm reception he enjoyed at the Grove. Too poor to own a horse, he had set out on foot for Racine in the spring of 1839. " A heavy rain came on and he was wet to the skin when he got to the tavern," his daughter later recorded. "He never told the story without expressing gratitude to the tavern keepers, man and wife, for the hospitality shown, for the loan of clothing while his own was being dried, and excellent food, and a comfortable bed."

Though the guest expressed satisfaction with the food and lodging, living conditions at Ives Grove in 1839 were primitive - a table set with pewter and a diet of venison acquired from the surrounding forest. Only a year prior, Potawotami Indians had abandoned the area and moved West, thus eliminating one danger, but just beyond the clearing lurked bear, wolves, and lynx. The Iveses had no neighbors, no church, and no school. Yet despite such "privations and dangers," a local history stated, "the settlers were contented, happy...and submitted cheerfully to the inconveniences...Religious services on Sunday were held... when a passing missionary came."

One persisting danger was prairie fire. The Grove was described as a verdant island in the midst of a vast, drab, treeless prairie. When a fire broke out, flames raced to the very edge of the Grove, encircling it and leaving the Ives family virtual prisoners, uncertain whether the conflagration would burn itself out or make the leap to the forest. But the Grove proved immune to prairie fires, allowing it's owners to proceed with their challenge to the wilderness: cutting timber; rolling and burning logs; plowing; planting wheat, oats, barley, and potatoes; and stocking herds of cattle, horses, sheep, and pigs. All of Roland, Sr.'s, six children took up residence at the Grove except for Stephen, who settled in the lake port of Racine and cofounded the first newspaper in the area. The opening issue of the Racine Weekly Argus appeared on Valentines Day, 1838, but due to high costs and low profits ceased publication the same year.

With the gradual settlement of the southeastern corner of Wisconsin Territory, activity at Ives grove daily increased. Farmers came from as far west as the Rock River, hauling wagonloads of produce to racine harbor and returning home with supplies. The five roads passing the Grove were busy much of the year. During dry weather, the cumbersome wagons bounced in and out of deep ruts, and with the rains, bogged down in mire. To improve the transportation essential to continuing development, the government allowed a private company to construct a toll road from Janesville, on the Rock River, to Racine. This "plank road," built on an elevated bed bordered by long timbers spread with oak planks, soon became the most popular route for both farmers and stages, and since it passed directly in front of the Ives inn, business flourished.

To meet the increasing traffic, Roland, Jr., built an elegant new tavern. With oak and walnut timbers cut from the grove, he erected a long, three story building, roofed with white-oak shingles and topped with a brick chimney at each end. Five separate doorways opened from the ground floor, five glass-paned windows lit the second, and full verandahs graced both. A store, post office, restaurant, and saloon were located on the first floor, bedrooms on the second, and on the third, a "spring floor," used for dances, roller skating, and other socials. In their improved facility, Roland charged a dollar for a night's lodging, which included barn space and feed for a six animal team, and for the driver, a bed, supper, breakfast, and " a "short" of whiskey. Additional orders of whiskey, a guest recalled, were drawn from a barrel and sold at three cents a glass." At such a high price, he added, "there was very little drunkenness among the settlers in the neighborhood."

For children of the wilderness, such as George and Albert Ives, the advent of the plank road provided a glorious spectacle. They marveled at the sight of long lines of travelers stretching from the inn in both directions over "level farm lands and up and down the low hills" for as far as the eye could see. There were trains of fifty to a hundred vehicles passing at one time: "wagons pulled by three pairs of oxen," straining against the weight of wheat and other produce, "herds of cattle and sheep being driven to market, occasionally a lone horseman or a dashing stagecoach drawn by a four horse team." At peak season, the Grove Barns accommodated fifty teams at night. When every bedroom on the second story was full, Roland spread the dance hall with cots, considerately surrounding each with a small booth to afford privacy.

As of March 30, 1861, the date of the foreclosure on the Ives Grove inn, Almira had been widowed, and could no longer support herself, her teenage daughter, and her blind father-in-law, age seventy-four.

The court had granted Almira only $254.63 from the estate, deducting from that sum twenty dollars she had already spent for her husband's coffin, and another six dollars for "Horse & Hearse for funeral." For sustenance, the three proud Iveses were forced to rely upon Albert, and whatever George could send.

Shortly after George's arrival in California, the state's 1852 enumeration took place, but George was not at camp when the census official made his appearance. The slightly inaccurate information provided by his new acquaintances presents the impression he made on his fellow miners. They knew only that he had been born somewhere in New England and reared somewhere near Lake Michigan; as for his age, they guessed he was about twenty-five, the extra seven years being a tribute to the teenager's maturity.

Though he undoubtedly participated in camp revelry, the other miners found that George did not have "much of the Braggart about him" and was ordinarily "peaceable."

He had a splendid physique, (all six feet of him), an acquaintance recalled, and "light complexion, neatly shaven face, and lively blue eyes." And in addition to being handsome, he earned the reputation of "an accomplished marksman" and a "bold rider." Thus "lesser" men "gathered about him as to a magnet."

Having come through seven years of California turbulence unscathed, he headed North, arriving in 1859 at the military post in Clark County, Washington Territory. Here, the commanding officer hired George to take charge of the military pack trains, a service he performed so well that, according to one account, he became "a favorite among the officers and men." Miners passing through the area also had reason to praise him. When a group of highwaymen laid plans to rob a party headed for Portland, George warned the intended victims, allowing them to keep their gold dust. As in California, George left the Washington garrison with a good reputation and an admirable work record.

After the 1860 discovery of gold at Oro Fino Creek, he visited that area, and in late spring of 1861, Pierce City. That summer he followed a stampede to Elk Creek Basin, where the first of a series of anecdotes about him and his fine horse arose.

George began an inn at his ranch in Bannack Montana to continue the work he knew as a child. One of his guests at the time had been accused of a murder. When a vigilante posse had come to take his boarder, the boarder told the posse that George had done the murder. George tried to convince them that he did not do the crime, but it was getting late, so the posse stayed the night at George?s inn, and in the morning George woke up and prepared, (I?m sure what was one of his better) breakfasts for the entire posse. They then took him on to Nevada City, where a mockery of a trial without any of the advantages of a regular trial with time to call for or subpoena witnesses, or with a sober judiciary, and defense team. All this with the displayed body of the victim propped up to incite the crowd into an almost uncontrolled frenzy. The trial was outside, and they used wagons for the courtroom. The trial was started on Saturday morning, and in the cold, cold evening on Sunday of December 1863 in Montana, when the crowd had been standing the whole time, they were tired and cold, and he was hastily found guilty and hung on the spot. He proclaimed his innocence and told the crowd who did the terrible murder in his last moments. The person he named was later hung by the vigilantes, as well as twenty-two other people. It was quickly seen that the vigilantes were just that, and the tide began to turn against them.

Since that time, many have sought to venerate those falsely accused and killed by the Montana vigilantes.

The advent of the Internet has provided a medium for a team of people who have personally taken up this cause, including Ruth E. Mather and F.E. Boswell. Some are the descendants of those who were killed by the vigilantes. In September of 1998, Steve Ives of Minneapolis, MN will be speaking in Nevada City about new information which has recently come to light about the events of this story. Steve has taken up this cause, and has been working to locate documents surrounding these events.

1152. CHAUNCEY BRADLEY[7] IVES (Jared[6], Ezra[5], Lazarus[4], Ebenezer[3], Joseph[2], William[1]) was born at Hamden on 14 December 1810,[12308] and he died in Rome, Italy on 2 August 1894.[12309] He was buried at Rome, Lazio, Italy in 1894 (Plat: 755 Zona Prima).[12310] He married Maria Louisa Davis at Rome on 4 October 1860.[12311] She was the daughter of Benjamin Wilson and Louisa Ann (Philip) Davis and she was born in New York about 1833.[12312]

Additional information for Chauncey Bradley Ives:

Chauncey was born in Hamden, Connecticut, just outside New Haven, in 1810. The son of Jared Ives, a farmer, Chauncey at age 16 was apprenticed to a local woodcarver, Rodolphus Northrop. Chauncey's carving attracted notice and he soon removed to Boston, then on to New York City. His weak lungs and competition from other sculptors in NYC eventually persuaded Chauncey to move to Florence, Italy in 1844. He moved to Rome in 1851. In Italy Chauncey made a name for himself carving fairly anodyne sculptures bearing names like "Cupid With His Net," "The Shepherd Boy," and "Pandora." Chauncey married Maria L. Davis of Brooklyn. Chauncey died in Rome in 1894.

"American artists, Chauncey Bradley Ives, was the sculptor behind this masterpiece, which is titled “Undine Rising from the Fountain”. The sculpture’s name comes from the name of the mythical water nymph of European folklore. Ives, a native of Connecticut, got his start as a woodcarver’s apprentice when he was just 16 years old. He later studied with Hezekiah Augur, a New Haven-area woodcarver who also worked in marble. This gave Ives an opportunity to try his hand at carving marble. Ives was commissioned to carve marble portraits in Boston and New York before he moved to Rome to continue

George Ives had been the Union's youngest bandmaster, his band called the best in the army. When the war ended George had returned to Danbury to take up the unusual trade, in that business-oriented town, of musician.

As a cornet player, band director, theater orchestra leader, choir director, and teacher, George Ives became the most influential musician in the region. Yet while Danbury prided itself during the 1880s in being called "the most musical town in Connecticut" (that in large part due to George Ives's labors), people still viewed the profession with little understanding or respect. That situation, which would have been the same in most American towns in the 19th century, had its impact on Charles Ives. Still, his family was prominent, noted for extravagant personalities and (except for George) a gift for business.

like father, like son
Ives told the story of his introduction to music: his father came home one day to find the five-year old banging out the Ives Band's drum parts on the piano, using his fists. George Ives's response gave the first impetus to his son's career as a musical innovator. Rather than saying, as would most parents, That's not how to play the piano, George observed instead, "It's all right to do that, Charles, if you know what you're doing," and sent the boy down the street for drum lessons.

"69. Edward H. Ives. Edward was born about 1837 in New York, and was the son of Sherlock Ives (1800-1871) and the nephew of Levi Silliman Ives (1797-1867), former Episcopal Bishop of North Carolina.

Some time in the 1850's, he moved with his family to St. Clair County, MI. He was 24 on 8/14/1861 when he enlisted at Altmont, MI for 3 years. On 9/6/1861 at Detroit he was mustered in as a private, Co. G, 1st Michigan Cavalry. Two weeks later, his regiment left the state for Washington, DC. The 1st Michigan served in the eastern theater throughout the war, performing the usual duties of a cavalry regiment - scouting, guarding lines of communication, screening the army, and sparring constantly with Jeb Stuart's Confederate horsemen. Edward appears to have been with the regiment for most of 1861-1863, with the exception of a period in the winter of 1862-63 during which he was absent on detached duty as an orderly at brigade headquarters (3rd brigade, 1st division, XII Army Corps). In mid-1863, just before the Battle of Gettysburg, the Army of the Potomac's cavalry was reorganized.

The 1st Michigan joined 3 other Michigan regiments of the "Michigan Brigade," which was assigned to the newly created Cavalry Corps, Army of the Potomac. The Michigan Brigade received both a new regiment, the 1st Michigan, and a new commander, newly-promoted brigadier general George Armstrong Custer. The flamboyant Custer proved an aggressive and talented cavalry commander, and the Michigan Brigade became one of the cavalry's best. In Civil War literature, they are sometimes referred to as "Custer's Wolverines." The 1st Michigan distinguished themselves under Custer at Gettysburg, where they helped block an attempt by Stuart's Confederate cavalry to strike the rear of the Union army. As Lee's army retreated south after Gettysburg, the Union cavalry harried the retreating column. On the evening of 7/13, near Williamsport, MD, Lee's army began crossing the Potomac back into Virginia. Early on the 14th the Union cavalry detected the confederate pullout and fell on Lee's rear guard, capturing a number of prisoners. The 1st Michigan's after-action report credits Private Edward Ives and another soldier with capturing the colors of the 40th Virginia Infantry at Williamsport. While the Gettysburg campaign was large and is well-known, most cavalry engagements were short, sharp affairs between small units and do not appear in history books. Typical of these was a skirmish involving troopers of the 1st Michigan near Morton's Ford on Virginia's Rapidan River on 11/27/1863, in the opening days of the Mine Run Campaign. During this engagement Edward was captured by Confederates. Confined first at Richmond, VA, on 2/21/1864 he was sent to the infamous POW camp at Andersonville, GA, where he remained for the rest of the war. Although he could not have known it, while he was at Andersonville Union Cavalry launched an attempt to liberate the camp. The attempt ended in disaster, with many of the would-be rescuers killed or captured. Ironically, one of the raiders was Edward's own brother, Sergeant Homer Ives of the 8th Michigan Cavalry, who was also one of those killed in the attempted rescue (see below). Edward was finally paroled at Vicksburg, MS on 4/21/1865, a few days after Lee's surrender at Appomatox. On 4/26/1865, with some 2,200 other recently-released POWs, he boarded the steamer Sultana for the voyage upriver to Cincinatti - the next leg on his return trip to freedom. Like most of the others, Edward had suffered terribly at Andersonville and was sickly and feverish when he boarded. Sultana 58 left Vicksburg in the late evening and steamed upriver. About 2 o'clock the following morning, the ship's boiler exploded. Sultana burned and sank very rapidly, taking Edward and some 1,700 others with her. His body was never found. Eight years after the death of his father in 1871, Edward's mother, Ann, filed for a pension based on her son's war service. (C-1840, C-1850, C-1860, CSR, FPR)"

"In 1852 Albert Baker purchased the mill site and constructed his sash and blind shop near Eben´s sawmill. In 1855 Baker took down the old sawmill and replaced it with a new shop. Later in 1870 a 30 ft. by 50 ft., three-story high shop had been built on the site and large quantities of top quality white pine were converted into sash, blinds, and millwork. Around 1893 the shops, dam and waterworks were sold to Horace Dunbar who continued the production of wood products until 1900. In 1900 the Serpentine Paint Company obtained ownership of the shops with the intention of making a fire proof paint from soapstone discovered near the junction of Fuller Road and East River Road. This company did not work out and the mills returned to the ownership of Horace Dunbar, Sr."

Married to Caroline Ives on 1 January 1839 in Goshen, CT.

He represented Barkhamsted in the Connecticut House of Representatives in 1869.

In 1850, Albert Baker was in the sash and blind business with his wife's brothers; Edwin, Henry and Charles Ives, in Canaan, Litchfield, Connecticut. In 1852, he purchased a mill site in the Farmingham River in Pleasant Valley. There he constructed 'Baker Sash and Blind' near Eben Woodruff ?s sawmill. In 1855 he replaced the old sawmill with a new shop and then in 1870, he built a three-story high shop on the site. Baker used white pine to make sash, blinds, and millwork. The Baker family home was also located on the site. Both of his sons, George and John, later joined him in the business.

David - The handwriting is Ruth Doud's, sister of Harold Doud. Ruth Doud was the genealogist in the family for that generation.

Anyway, Ruth Doud is quoting Anna Margaret Ives Doud who is telling of the 'blending' of the Ives and Douds. It's written from the Ives perspective. I'll attempt to 'translate' - I get it but I couldn't begin remember it.

"Our families have blended - My grandmother, Cornelia Ann Warren is buried near yours (Mary Roxanna Scranton Doud). Bill Scranton's (gov) (William Warren Scranton was the governor of PA in the 1960s) mother was Marjorie Warren, her great grandfather (Harris Franklin Warren) a brother of Cornelia Ann Warren and Bill Scranton's (William Warren Scranton) great uncle Charles Henry Doud was your grandfather (she explains) Charles H. Doud married your grandmother, Mary R(Roxanna) Scranton, her brother was Joseph Hand Scranton, Worthington's grandfather. Worthington was Bill Scranton's father and he married Marjorie Warren."

IVES SOLDIERS of the AMERICAN CIVIL WAR

"Hiram R. Ives. Born in Otsego County, NY about 1824, Hiram Ives was about 36, married, and had 2 children in 1861. Nonetheless, he enlisted 11/24/1861 at Summit, Schoharie County, NY, for 3 years. He was mustered in 1/16/1862 at Albany, NY, as 4th sergeant of Co. K, 76th New York Infantry. He appears to have been present with the regiment until 7/31/1862 when he was appointed Brigade Ordnance Sergeant and detailed to the staff of the brigade commander, General Abner Doubleday. He remained with the brigade staff until about October 1863, then returned to the regiment. On 3/31/1863 he was reduced to the ranks, and spent the remainder of his service as a private. On 6/12/1863 he became sick and was admitted to an army hospital in Washington, DC. Apparently, he was soon transferred to Mower US Army General Hospital, Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia, where he remained except for a short furlough until early 1864. He returned to his regiment about March 1864 and within a month was detailed to corps headquarters as an orderly. According to regimental returns, he remained in this duty assignment for the rest of his service. During the summer of 1864, there was a reorganization of his regiment, and on 7/1/1864 he was administratively transferred from K company to G company. On 10/20/1864 he was again transferred, this time to D company, and was mustered out from that company on the same date. The 76th New York spent its entire service in the eastern theater. They were originally assigned to Doubleday's brigade of King's division. At Gettysburg, they were part of the 2nd Brigade, 1st (Wadsworth's) Division, 1st Corps, Army of the Potomac (Hiram Ives was not with the regiment at Gettysburg, having been in the hospital at that time). When the 1st Corps was disbanded, Wadsworth's division was transferred to the V Army Corps, then commanded by General Gouverneur Warren. They served with that organization thereafter, fighting at the Wilderness, Spotsylvania, Cold Harbor, and in the trenches before Richmond-Petersburg. Hiram returned to New York, to his wife, Anna M. (maiden name unknown) and two sons William B Ives (b. abt 1852) and Isaac N. Ives (b. abt 1848). He probably lived the remainder of his life in Summit, NY, where his name appears in the 1880 census. He applied for a pension in 1882, and his widow, Anna M., applied in 1885 while living in New York. Circumstantial evidence suggests that Hiram was probably the son of Isaac P. Ives (c. 1798 - aft. 1880) and Margaret Dibble (c. 1800 - 1876). (CSR, C1880, IFPR)"

The ashes of Halsey Cooley Ives repose in the Ives family plot in the Montour Falls Cemetery next to that of Governor David B. Hill, the village's other famous person. Today the name of Governor Hill might bring a flicker of recognition but most likely a similar mention of Dr. Ives would only result in a blank look. Yet Halsey Ives was a world-renowned figure in art education and administration at the time of his death in 1911.

Halsey Ives was born on October 27, 1847, in Havana, Schuyler County, New York. His father was Hiram DuBoise Ives, listed as a lumberman in the Census of 1850, and his mother was Theresa McDowell Ives. Halsey was educated in his native village and attended Havana Union School. He was only fourteen years old when his father died on December 16, 1861. Evidently he had more than average artistic talent. An official biography notes that he took up drafting and states that in 1864, at the age of seventeen, he "entered the service of the United States Government and was sent to Nashville. " The wording of this seems to imply that he joined the army but this was not the case. It does not seem reasonable that the government would hire a teen-aged "draftsman" and send him to occupied Tennessee while the Civil War was still underway. Also the job description of "draftsman" seems to be an euphemism for the more prosaic occupation of house and sign painter and paperhanger.

Perhaps the most illuminating source about Ives's early life is an interview with a contemporary of his published in the Havana Journal in 1893. According to a Colonel Sam Paine, Ives had a natural artistic talent. "He was a dreamy boy who saw pictures in the glens, running brooks and waterfalls of his native village, but he had neither time nor money at his command to transfer these to canvas. " One of his earliest works was a "bright red vermillion picture" of "Queen Catherine Montour" painted on the side of a saloon within view of the Chemung Canal.

His work attracted the attention of Charles Cook, one of the wealthiest men in Havana, who got him a job as house painter, Paine declared. Cook was an ambitious dreamer who founded People's College in Havana as the site of New York State's land grant college. Cook was outmaneuvered politically by Ezra Cornell of Ithaca whose school became Cornell University. Cook was equally unsuccessful in winning for Havana the designation of county seat when Schuyler County was formed in 1854, even though he built a fine set of county buildings.

Paine wrote, "I met Halsey Ives in Havana in 1866 and became acquainted with him, because like him I had the Bohemian instinct which neither of us could shake off. " At the time "young Ives wore long hair, and there was a poetic expression about the Grecian contour of his face. " Ives's earliest paintings were of local scenes such as the falls near his home and were described as "works that most any sign painter could have produced. " Ives, called "the then crude artist," was very proud of them. In those days Ives wasn't very ambitious, according to Paine. He was an inveterate smoker, and loved to hang around a local restaurant and swap stories with the farmers who used to drop in from Odessa.

But then, Paine declared, Ives changed the course of his life suddenly by throwing his pipe away and vowing never to smoke again, a vow that he kept. He was working as a grainer when he packed his brushes and headed for St. Louis. A grainer was a person who painted on a flat surface to imitate fine wood or marble on three dimensional objects. The kind of work he did can still be seen in St. Paul's Episcopal Church in Montour Falls.

In St. Louis a sketch that he did on a piece of backyard fence attracted the attention of a benefactor who got him a job in the art school of Washington University. This account by Colonel Paine seems to make more sense than the standard biographical information in print.

His official biography states that in 1869, he became "a designer and decorator," travelling through the South and West. In 1872 he was said to have made a journey into Mexico and that two years later he showed up in St. Louis where he got a job as a teacher of art in the Polytechnic School of Washington University (founded 1853). His art education was continued abroad "under several teachers," none of which are identified. When he returned to St. Louis he became a member of the faculty of Washington University.

His administrative ability was quickly recognized and he is credited with founding the Washington University School of Fine Arts and the St. Louis Art Museum, formally inaugurated in 1879. Early in his career he came to believe that the applied or industrial arts should be included in the definition of Fine Art and he followed this idea throughout his long career. He was director of both the school and the museum when a new museum building was opened in 1881. For many years he gave courses of lectures on Sundays free to workers who could not afford the time for the study of art on other days of the week. He built outstanding collections for the museum, always emphasizing the applied and industrial arts.

In 1892, Ives was appointed head of the Art Department of the World's Columbian Exposition of 1893. This was the famous Chicago World's Fair, an unforgettable experience for the more than 27 million people who attended. This position brought Ives international recognition. The following year he was appointed by the National Bureau of Education to travel abroad and examine the courses of institutions and methods of work in various foreign art schools and museums. He was also selected to represent the United States as Commissioner of Art at various expositions abroad.

Another achievement was his work as head of the Department of Art at the Centennial of the Acquisition of Louisiana in St. Louis. The St. Louis World's Fair in 1904 rivaled that of Chicago a decade earlier. Ives was successful in having the art building of the fair built as a permanent structure that would serve as the city's art museum after the fair.

In 1897 he was elected to a four-year term on the St. Louis City Council where he used his expertise to promote public support for a city art museum. His efforts were successful in establishing the art museum as a public, tax-supported institution that won national recognition. As Director of the Art Museum of St. Louis, he "was known and recognized at home and abroad as one of the foremost personalities in the art world. "

He was the recipient of many honors. Washington University awarded him the honorary degree of L. L. D. in 1905. In a private audience with King Oscar of Sweden and Norway, he was made a knight of the Order of Wasa. His knighthoods eventually included the Orders of Daneborg of Denmark, of Saints Moritz and Lazar, of Leopold of Belgium, and of Christ of Portugal. He was also Commander of the Chinese Order of the Double Dragon and the Bulgarian Order of Saint Alexander and received the Iron Cross of Franz Joseph of Austria. These were in addition to commendations from the governments of France, Germany, Italy and Holland. "He was honored with many decorations by foreign governments and with numerous diplomas and medals from exposition and art organizations. "

He received a special commendation from President Theodore Roosevelt written from the White House, April 18, 1906. "My Dear Mr. Ives, I can hardly imagine that any good American would fail to feel interest in and hearty approval of the enterprise in which you are engaged. The artistic merits are sufficiently proved by the testimony of men like John La Farge, Augustus Saint Gaudens, Frederick Dielman, F. J. Skiff, D. H. Burnham, Charles F. McKim and the other architects, artists and sculptors who have written you. It seems to me that such a museum as is suggested would be one of the strongest factors in the development of art education and of the appreciation of art, not only in your own part of the country, but throughout the Union. I feel such a monument would not only have an excellent influence upon the development of an appreciation for good architecture in the Middle West, but throughout the entire country. I earnestly hope that you may find men wise and generous enough to enable you to undertake the work in question. " In spite of the various honors and endorsements, it was recorded that Ives, "oftentimes felt that his work was not appreciated and his sacrifices not realized. "

Dr. Ives never forgot the place where he was born and grew up. He sent back photographs from the Chicago World's Fair and from other expositions over the years to the Montour Falls Library, as well as barrels of statuary, pictures and copies of pictures. (The Havana Library Association was organized in 1872 and the name changed when Havana became Montour Falls by law on May 14, 1895.) A story that may be apocryphal, suggests that Ives had a role in the name change. When people asked him where he came from and he answered "Havana," they often thought it was Havana, Cuba. This so annoyed him that he inaugurated the movement that brought about the bill to change the name. Whatever the veracity of this story, it is clear that he approved of the name change.

In 1886 Ives presented a life-size bust of Charles Cook to Cook Academy in a dedication ceremony attended by Governor Hill. This bust now has place of honor in the Montour Falls Library which also has on display a number of statues and paintings sent by Ives. Ives developed as an artist and did some painting of his own. A landscape painting, "Waste Lands," won a silver medal at the Portland exhibition of 1905. His most important achievements, however, were in teaching and administration. At the time of his death he was recognized as the dean of American art educators.

He was married to Margaret Lackland of St. Louis in 1887 and the couple had two children, a daughter, Caroline Eliot, and a son, Neil McDowell. Two maiden sisters, Misses Marion T. Ives and Edwina L. Ives, who lived in the family home, 225 South Genesee Street, in Montour Falls, survived him. This house, built about 1845 and extensively remodeled in 1885 and 1926, is still standing. He was also survived by several nieces and nephews.

Ives died suddenly in London on May 5, 1911, at the age of 64, while on a business trip. His ashes were returned to Montour Falls for interment in the family burial plot. Funeral services, conducted by the Rev. Francis Rice, were held at St. Paul's Episcopal Church on May 22, 1911. According to former Historian, Mrs. Mary Layton, a Viking Cross was brought from one of the international fairs and put on his grave. "It lasted a number of years but finally had to come down. " No trace of it can be found today. A simple stone now marks the grave of one of the most celebrated persons associated with Montour Falls.

The ashes of Halsey Cooley Ives repose in the Ives family plot in the Montour Falls Cemetery next to that of Governor David B. Hill, the village's other famous person. Today the name of Governor Hill might bring a flicker of recognition but most likely a similar mention of Dr. Ives would only result in a blank look. Yet Halsey Ives was a world-renowned figure in art education and administration at the time of his death in 1911.

Halsey Ives was born on October 27, 1847, in Havana, Schuyler County, New York. His father was Hiram DuBoise Ives, listed as a lumberman in the Census of 1850, and his mother was Theresa McDowell Ives. Halsey was educated in his native village and attended Havana Union School. He was only fourteen years old when his father died on December 16, 1861. Evidently he had more than average artistic talent. An official biography notes that he took up drafting and states that in 1864, at the age of seventeen, he "entered the service of the United States Government and was sent to Nashville. " The wording of this seems to imply that he joined the army but this was not the case. It does not seem reasonable that the government would hire a teen-aged "draftsman" and send him to occupied Tennessee while the Civil War was still underway. Also the job description of "draftsman" seems to be an euphemism for the more prosaic occupation of house and sign painter and paperhanger.

Perhaps the most illuminating source about Ives's early life is an interview with a contemporary of his published in the Havana Journal in 1893. According to a Colonel Sam Paine, Ives had a natural artistic talent. "He was a dreamy boy who saw pictures in the glens, running brooks and waterfalls of his native village, but he had neither time nor money at his command to transfer these to canvas. " One of his earliest works was a "bright red vermillion picture" of "Queen Catherine Montour" painted on the side of a saloon within view of the Chemung Canal.

His work attracted the attention of Charles Cook, one of the wealthiest men in Havana, who got him a job as house painter, Paine declared. Cook was an ambitious dreamer who founded People's College in Havana as the site of New York State's land grant college. Cook was outmaneuvered politically by Ezra Cornell of Ithaca whose school became Cornell University. Cook was equally unsuccessful in winning for Havana the designation of county seat when Schuyler County was formed in 1854, even though he built a fine set of county buildings.

Paine wrote, "I met Halsey Ives in Havana in 1866 and became acquainted with him, because like him I had the Bohemian instinct which neither of us could shake off. " At the time "young Ives wore long hair, and there was a poetic expression about the Grecian contour of his face. " Ives's earliest paintings were of local scenes such as the falls near his home and were described as "works that most any sign painter could have produced. " Ives, called "the then crude artist," was very proud of them. In those days Ives wasn't very ambitious, according to Paine. He was an inveterate smoker, and loved to hang around a local restaurant and swap stories with the farmers who used to drop in from Odessa.

But then, Paine declared, Ives changed the course of his life suddenly by throwing his pipe away and vowing never to smoke again, a vow that he kept. He was working as a grainer when he packed his brushes and headed for St. Louis. A grainer was a person who painted on a flat surface to imitate fine wood or marble on three dimensional objects. The kind of work he did can still be seen in St. Paul's Episcopal Church in Montour Falls.

In St. Louis a sketch that he did on a piece of backyard fence attracted the attention of a benefactor who got him a job in the art school of Washington University. This account by Colonel Paine seems to make more sense than the standard biographical information in print.

His official biography states that in 1869, he became "a designer and decorator," travelling through the South and West. In 1872 he was said to have made a journey into Mexico and that two years later he showed up in St. Louis where he got a job as a teacher of art in the Polytechnic School of Washington University (founded 1853). His art education was continued abroad "under several teachers," none of which are identified. When he returned to St. Louis he became a member of the faculty of Washington University.

His administrative ability was quickly recognized and he is credited with founding the Washington University School of Fine Arts and the St. Louis Art Museum, formally inaugurated in 1879. Early in his career he came to believe that the applied or industrial arts should be included in the definition of Fine Art and he followed this idea throughout his long career. He was director of both the school and the museum when a new museum building was opened in 1881. For many years he gave courses of lectures on Sundays free to workers who could not afford the time for the study of art on other days of the week. He built outstanding collections for the museum, always emphasizing the applied and industrial arts.

In 1892, Ives was appointed head of the Art Department of the World's Columbian Exposition of 1893. This was the famous Chicago World's Fair, an unforgettable experience for the more than 27 million people who attended. This position brought Ives international recognition. The following year he was appointed by the National Bureau of Education to travel abroad and examine the courses of institutions and methods of work in various foreign art schools and museums. He was also selected to represent the United States as Commissioner of Art at various expositions abroad.

Another achievement was his work as head of the Department of Art at the Centennial of the Acquisition of Louisiana in St. Louis. The St. Louis World's Fair in 1904 rivaled that of Chicago a decade earlier. Ives was successful in having the art building of the fair built as a permanent structure that would serve as the city's art museum after the fair.

In 1897 he was elected to a four-year term on the St. Louis City Council where he used his expertise to promote public support for a city art museum. His efforts were successful in establishing the art museum as a public, tax-supported institution that won national recognition. As Director of the Art Museum of St. Louis, he "was known and recognized at home and abroad as one of the foremost personalities in the art world. "

He was the recipient of many honors. Washington University awarded him the honorary degree of L. L. D. in 1905. In a private audience with King Oscar of Sweden and Norway, he was made a knight of the Order of Wasa. His knighthoods eventually included the Orders of Daneborg of Denmark, of Saints Moritz and Lazar, of Leopold of Belgium, and of Christ of Portugal. He was also Commander of the Chinese Order of the Double Dragon and the Bulgarian Order of Saint Alexander and received the Iron Cross of Franz Joseph of Austria. These were in addition to commendations from the governments of France, Germany, Italy and Holland. "He was honored with many decorations by foreign governments and with numerous diplomas and medals from exposition and art organizations. "

He received a special commendation from President Theodore Roosevelt written from the White House, April 18, 1906. "My Dear Mr. Ives, I can hardly imagine that any good American would fail to feel interest in and hearty approval of the enterprise in which you are engaged. The artistic merits are sufficiently proved by the testimony of men like John La Farge, Augustus Saint Gaudens, Frederick Dielman, F. J. Skiff, D. H. Burnham, Charles F. McKim and the other architects, artists and sculptors who have written you. It seems to me that such a museum as is suggested would be one of the strongest factors in the development of art education and of the appreciation of art, not only in your own part of the country, but throughout the Union. I feel such a monument would not only have an excellent influence upon the development of an appreciation for good architecture in the Middle West, but throughout the entire country. I earnestly hope that you may find men wise and generous enough to enable you to undertake the work in question. " In spite of the various honors and endorsements, it was recorded that Ives, "oftentimes felt that his work was not appreciated and his sacrifices not realized. "

Dr. Ives never forgot the place where he was born and grew up. He sent back photographs from the Chicago World's Fair and from other expositions over the years to the Montour Falls Library, as well as barrels of statuary, pictures and copies of pictures. (The Havana Library Association was organized in 1872 and the name changed when Havana became Montour Falls by law on May 14, 1895.) A story that may be apocryphal, suggests that Ives had a role in the name change. When people asked him where he came from and he answered "Havana," they often thought it was Havana, Cuba. This so annoyed him that he inaugurated the movement that brought about the bill to change the name. Whatever the veracity of this story, it is clear that he approved of the name change.

In 1886 Ives presented a life-size bust of Charles Cook to Cook Academy in a dedication ceremony attended by Governor Hill. This bust now has place of honor in the Montour Falls Library which also has on display a number of statues and paintings sent by Ives. Ives developed as an artist and did some painting of his own. A landscape painting, "Waste Lands," won a silver medal at the Portland exhibition of 1905. His most important achievements, however, were in teaching and administration. At the time of his death he was recognized as the dean of American art educators.

He was married to Margaret Lackland of St. Louis in 1887 and the couple had two children, a daughter, Caroline Eliot, and a son, Neil McDowell. Two maiden sisters, Misses Marion T. Ives and Edwina L. Ives, who lived in the family home, 225 South Genesee Street, in Montour Falls, survived him. This house, built about 1845 and extensively remodeled in 1885 and 1926, is still standing. He was also survived by several nieces and nephews.

Ives died suddenly in London on May 5, 1911, at the age of 64, while on a business trip. His ashes were returned to Montour Falls for interment in the family burial plot. Funeral services, conducted by the Rev. Francis Rice, were held at St. Paul's Episcopal Church on May 22, 1911. According to former Historian, Mrs. Mary Layton, a Viking Cross was brought from one of the international fairs and put on his grave. "It lasted a number of years but finally had to come down. " No trace of it can be found today. A simple stone now marks the grave of one of the most celebrated persons associated with Montour Falls.

Additional information for Julius Mortimer Ives:

personal communication from James Lott Ives, 16 March 2013 --

"Hi Lori and David....I have looked over The 2 pdf files and find that they are incorret about Julius Mortimer Ives being born in Nova Scotia.

He was born in the United States (according to the 1851 census . Nova Scotia is a province on the east coast of Canada, north of the State of Maine.

Although there were some Loyalists that immigrated to Nova Scotia, Arthur Coon Ives' book " The Ives Family" 1928 is very precise and definitive that Elam Burr Ives came to Canada in approximately 1811(after Julius was born) and was given a land grant (to Loyalists) in the Grafton area. He is buried in the Salem Cemetery east of Grafton and Colborne Ontario, along with 33 other relatives.

He was a doctor and travelled on horseback from his home, east to Toronto and west to Kingston. In 1813, his is listed as the secretary of Prince Edward Masonic Lodge No. 18 in Picton, Ontario. We assume that he must have been a mason when he immigrated from Onieda, New York because the Picton Lodge was established in 1811 and to be Secretary, he was probably a past master. He obviously made his visits to the Picton area to coincide with the monthly lodge meetings. I have a photo copy of a membership certificate issued to a Guy Henry Young in 1813 with Elam B. Ives as secretary.

Our direct ancestory line is as follows: William 1, John 2, Joseph 3, Thomas 4, Andrew 5, Lent 6, Elam Burr 7, Julius Mortimer 8, Ira 9, James Blake 10, James Bertram 11, James Lott 12, James Blake 13 (no children)

I have a lot of documentation from the booklet "The Ives Connection" written and researched in 1988 by Ruth E. Law of Uxbridge, Ontario. She was an Ives following the line of Elam Burr Junior who was a son of Ira. She is dead now but I bought a copy of her works and helped her with our present family lines.

Hope this helps.....Dad

PS David please feel free to e-mail me with any questions . Jim"

Lee County Biography: "William Ellery Ives", Amboy, Lee Co., IL. - "The best biography of an honorable and influential man is sure to be his own works. The simple recital of prominent events in the life of Mr. Ives needs not be elaborated by the biographical writer, and the personality of names, places and dates is important only as they enable the reader to trace the steps of his mental growth. He is widely known as an eminent attorney-at-law and is the pioneer lawyer of Amboy, where his shingle has been hung to the breeze since 1854. He has been foremost in all important measures for the development of the city, and was the prime mover in founding and carrying on the first newspaper ever published here. Ellery, Chautauqua County NY was the birthplace on May 24, 1821. His parents, Almon and Nancy (Tomblin) Ives, were natives respectively of Vermont and New York, and the former was engaged as a farmer and civil engineer. At Malone, a town on the St. Lawrence River in New York, he married and in 1816 settled in the western part of that State when it was an unsettled country. In 1834 he migrated to Illinois under promise to survey the public lands, but when he came West Andrew Jackson, then President, concluded that to the "victor belongs the spoil," and as Mr. Ives was a Whig, his services were not desired. He settled in that part of La Salle County which in 1840 became Kendall County, and improved a farm. In the public affairs of the county he became quite prominent, serving as the first Recorder of Deeds, and afterward becoming Judge of the County Court, which office he held several terms. In 1854 the father of our subject removed to Bloomington, this State, and a year later came to Amboy, where he died March 5, 1864, aged 75 years and 8 months. During the last years of his life he was a stanch supporter of the Republican party, and in his religious sentiments he was an earnest member of the Baptist Church. The mother of our subject died at Amboy, April 22, 1862. There were nine children in the family, of which our subject was a member, as follows - Almond B, a lawyer at Bloomington IL, where he died; Simeon P., a minister in the Baptist Church, now residing in Missoula Mon.; William E., of this sketch; Franklin B., a physician whose home is in Chicago; Isaac S., formerly a physician at Oswego IL, where he died in 1852; Sarah M., who married Alfred Tucker and resides at Ottawa IL; Enos J., a member of the Board of Trade at Chicago, and a resident of Woodlawn; Ruth A., who married Willis Hawthorn, and died in Amboy; and Nancy, who became the wife of Warren C. Sears, and makes her home in Burlington, Kan. When the Ives family moved to Illinois William E. was but a boy entering upon his teens. His youth was passed upon a farm and he received a good education at Grandville Academy. Having resolved to enter upon the practice of law, he attended the National Law School at Balston Spa, N. Y., where he graduated in 1852. He first located for the practice of law in Oswego, Ill., whence he came to Amboy, becoming first attorney here, and now enjoying the distinction of being the oldest lawyer in Lee County. Besides attending to his large practice, he manages a stock farm which he owns, located near Amboy and comprising one thousand acres. On December 8, 1841, occurred the marriage of Mr. Ives to Miss Susan R., daughter of James Ryon, and sister of Dr. Ryon, of Amboy, whose sketch is presented in another portion of this volume. Mrs. Ives was born April 17, 1821, in Tioga County, Pa., and her union with Mr. Ives has been blessed by the birth of five children, two of whom died in childhood. The survivors are - Charles E. Ives, a lawyer of Amboy; Esther N., wife of Elijah A. Winn, of Amboy; and James N., of Denver, Col. The latter is a graduate of Rochester University, N. Y., and a lawyer by profession, having practiced for a time in Dixon, this State whence he removed to Denver in and there published a paper called the Mining Review he has devoted considerable attention to literary pursuits, and as a writer possesses more than ordinary ability, wielding a ready pen and being known as a forcible illustrator of truths. Financially, he has been very successful and is now devoting his energies mainly to real estate, although he was recently interested in the Colorado Business Directory as its publisher. During his earlier years Mr. Ives was a stanch adherent of the Whig party, but has been a member of the Republican party since he served as delegate to the convention which organized the party in this State in 1860 he made "stump" speeches for Abraham Lincoln for the Presidency, and has contributed his influence to the success of the party. Frequently he is called to serve as delegate to district and state convention and in many positions of trust and responsibility he has served, always with distinguished ability. As Mayor of the city of Amboy he served creditably for four years and contributed no little to the development of the resources of the place. He was also States Attorney for six years he is serving as Treasurer of the Baptist Church, of which he is a consistent member. Socially, he belongs to the Royal Arch Masons his home is one of the most elegant in Amboy and is the only residence here which is heated by hot water. His success has not been attained without great effort on his part, for when he came here he was quite poor, and it has been only by the exercise of great industry and shrewd judgment that he has become well-to-do.

At the home of her son, A.D. Cady, in Gascoyne, North Dakota, Sept. 11th, Mrs. Alma Cady, widow of the late Almond Cady, aged 92 years.

Mrs. Cady was born in Topson, Vt., in 1826. Her maiden name was Alma Ives. Her father's family was one of the first to settle in Dickinson. There she spent her early years, married and continued to reside till 1863 when she and her husband moved to Minnesota. Her husband died in 1877 and she went to North Dakota to reside with her son in 1911. Deceased was a sister of Hon. M.V.B. Ives of Potsdam. She is survived by her son and his family and a grandson, A.L. Cady, and his family, all of Gascoyne. Mrs. Cady was a devout Christian woman, of high character and exceptional ability. In the early years of her life she was a loyal member and attendant of the Christian church at East Dickinson. Her husband, Almond Cady, was born and reared at the old Cady Tavern, East Dickinson, and was an uncle of Clinton Cady and the late W.N. Cady, of Malone. The funeral of deceased took place from the Congregational church at Gascoyne and the floral offerings from the Ladies' Aid Society and business men of Gascoyne were very beautiful. Mrs. H. Cady, of Mellette, South Dakota, was present at the funeral.

On August 10, 1862 he enlisted in Co G 106th NY Infantry of the Union Army and and spent ten months guarding the B & O railroad at New Creek, VA. He was then transferred to the army of the Potomac and fought in battles from Gettysburg, July 1863 to Cold Harbor where he was wounded in the chest by a clear shot through and spent 6 months in the hospital being discharged by disability as 1st Lieutenant for gallant and meritorious conduct.

Warren then chose to move west and employed in stave and barrel heading manufacturing at Red Wing, MN prior to settling in Hutchinson, MN in 1871. There, he purchased partnership in the merchantile business and also expanded to a butter trade:

1875 Black Hills, Dakota

1883 Hassan Valley cremery, Hutchinson

1885-6 with partners built a rail road connection at Young America, MN with St Louis which eventually became a line between Minneapolis and Hutchinson

He also took an interest in public service. In 1880, he was elected to the State Legislature and re elected in 1881. He was State dairy commissioner in 1887 aiding in the development of milk inspection.

"Illustrated Album of Biography of Meeker and McLeod Counties, Minnesota" 1888.

The 1883 List of Pensioners show Warren received a monthly pension of $8.00 due to a gun shot wound to the right shoulder; Warren was listed in McLeod county, MN. (Page 558)"

Joseph Christmas Ives (1828-Nov. 12, 1868) was born in New York City and a graduate of the United States Military Academy (1852). From 1853 to 1854 he was appointed by the U.S. Army to the Topographical Engineers as assistant to Lt. A.W. Whipple in the Pacific Railroad survey along the 35th parallel. From 1857 to 1858 he commanded an expedition to explore the Colorado River and subsequently wrote many invaluable reports on his findings. He served as engineer and architect for the Washington national monument (1859-1860). During the Civil War he served in several engineering capacities, and was finally appointed aide-de-camp to President Jefferson Davis (1863-1865). After the war he settled in New York City where he died. He is probably the Joseph C. From 1857 to 1858 Ives commanded an expedition to explore up the Colorado River from its mouth. At Robinson's Landing he built then used the 54 foot paddlewheel steamboat Explorer to map and survey the river. His party included Smithsonian associate John Strong Newberry as geologist. He led his party up the Colorado to the lower end of the Grand Canyon, then struck out across the desert to Fort Defiance in Colorado. Ives Reported his findings in his 1861 Report upon the Colorado river of the West[1] The Ives expedition produced one of the important early maps of the Grand Canyon drawn by F. W. v. Egloffstein, topographer to the expedition.[2]

IVES, 1857-58
The Colorado River Exploring Expedition

While E. F. Beale was building his wagon road across northern Arizona, the United States army organized an expedition to investigate the navigability of the Colorado River for possible use as a transportation corridor into California, Utah, and New Mexico, which then included Arizona. Lieutenant Joseph Christmas Ives, who had been with Whipple's railroad survey a few years earlier, was selected to command the expedition.

Ives hired several experienced men to help him: John S. Newberry, paleobotanist and geologist; Heinrich Baldwin Möllhausen, natural historian and artist and Baron F.W. von Egloffstein, topographer and artist. He had a shallow-draught steamboat constructed and shipped to the mouth of the Colorado River in pieces. The boat, named the Explorer, was assembled in the lower delta and then used to explore the river most of the way to Las Vegas Wash.
Ives's steamboat "the Explorer."

When the river exploration was complete, Ives sent the boat downriver and converted to pack mules to travel eastward cross-country to the settlements in New Mexico. Along the way, they became the first European Americans to visit the Colorado River at the bottom of the Grand Canyon. They also were the first to follow the Havasupai Trail to the bottom of the canyon.

Another first that came out of this expedition was a new style of map drawing invented by Frederick von Egloffstein for the official expedition maps. Instead of tediously-drawn hachures to show terrain relief features, Egloffstein used a shaded relief style, which is still preferred for modern maps. He also had to invent and patent a usable halftone printing process in order to successfully print his new continuous tone maps.

"In January 1858, Lt. Joseph Ives set out from Yuma in the steamship Explorer to determine how far boats could go upriver on the mighty Colorado. While still within sight of amused spectators at Fort Yuma, his pilot ran the boat aground. This would happen many more times, usually to the delight of Indians gathered on the riverbank who knew the river and could predict the groundings.

Further detracting from the expedition's glory, Yuma-based riverman George Alonzo Johnson beat Ives to the punch by running one of his boats upriver into Black Canyon several weeks before Ives. Johnson had offered Ives his services and the use of one of his boats. Ives rejected the offer; in a fit of competitive spirit, Johnson decided to do it first.

Despite this inauspicious beginning, Ives's expedition was a crowning achievement of the Army's splendid Corps of Topographical Engineers. Historian William H. Goetzmann acknowledged it as "one of the most remarkable American explorations of the nineteenth century."

Going was very difficult. In one notable three-day period, they made only nine miles. Slow progress was frustrating, but was undoubtedly beneficial to the expedition's scientific work, which they handled with extraordinary skill.

Among the achievements cited by historian Goetzmann was the expedition's contact and generally friendly relations with largely unknown Indian tribes. The Indians were curious and often helpful as guides. Ives occasionally invited a few aboard the boat. Once, he proudly showed off his brass-rimmed compass. His visitors were fascinated but, observed Ives (who was never very self-effacing), once the Indians understood what the device was for, they thought he must not be very smart to need it to tell him which way he was going. In a charming aside, Ives recounted with some pride that he made a speech to a group of Indians without once mentioning "the Great White Father in Washington."

Churning upriver, they passed the mouth of the Bill Williams River, which Ives had followed a few years earlier as an assistant to Lt. Amiel Whipple. Further on, near the Needles, they passed the spots where Capt. Lorenzo Sitgreaves came overland to the Colorado and where Lt. Edward Beale and his camels recently crossed. Those explorations were looking for potential railroad routes; Ives wanted to see if the river could become a highway.

Ives pressed the ungainly Explorer up several rapids, eventually entering Black Canyon not far from today's Hoover Dam before striking one last rock and declaring that spot to be the head of navigation. Ives sent the Explorer back to Yuma while he and part of his crew rowed a skiff further upriver as far as Las Vegas Wash. They determined that the Mormon Road into Utah was not far to the west, and that the Virgin River was close by. Either of these would provide a route into Utah if the Army needed to move against the independence-minded Mormon settlers."

"Joseph Christmas Ives was born on Christmas Day, 1829. An enterprising youth, he took to engineering, eventually gaining degrees from Bowdain College in Maine and West Point. At the tender age of 28, Joesph was given the task of exploring up the Colorado River from its mouth at the Gulf of California. For the task, he designed and built is own steamboat, The Explorer, and assembled a crack team of scientists to study the resources of the mighty Colorado. His expedition moved swiftly upriver until their ship crashed as they approached Black Canyon, in modern Lake Mead National Recreation Area. From there, they continued via skiff for thirty miles and eventually on foot-ultimately reaching the edge of the Grand Canyon of the Colorado River. Thus, Ives is thought to be the first European American to stand at the bottom of the Grand Canyon.

Ives returned east and wrote up his findings in a Report upon the Colorado River of the West. And while he lauded the scale and geology of the region, his report was not highly complementary of the canyon country. In fact, his description of the Grand Canyon is perhaps most markedly negative:

Another reconnaissance has since been made on foot from the lagoons westward…An excellent view was had of the Big cañon…Our reconnoitering parties have now been out in all directions, and everywhere have been headed off by impassable obstacles. The positions of the main water-courses have been determined with considerable accuracy. The region last explored is, of course, altogether valueless. It can be approached only from the south, and after entering it there is nothing to do but leave. Ours has been the first, and will doubtless be the last, party of whites to visit this profitless locality. It seems intended by nature that the Colorado river, along the greater portion of its lonely and majestic way, shall be forever unvisited and undisturbed…The deer, the antelope, the birds, even the smaller reptiles, all of which frequent the adjacent territory have deserted this uninhabitable district.

Ives was, of course, wrong. In 2018 alone, Grand Canyon National Park hosted 6.38 million visits. A 2017 study found that the canyon brings $938 million dollars to the region annually. The total value of the canyon is immeasurable. It is lauded as one of the Seven Wonders of the World and has been designated as a UNESCO World Heritage Site.

For Joseph Christmas Ives, the story of ignorance doesn't end there either. Despite his Yankee roots, he would eventually defect from the army to join the Confederacy during the Civil War and fight to continue the enslavement of African Americans. He would die shortly thereafter."

Joseph Christmas Ives: 1857-58

Grand Canyon was the last largely unexplored area of the West in 1857. Often called "The Great Unknown" it was literally a blank space on maps. It was known that the Colorado River made a significant portion of its journey through this area, so the federal government funded an expedition to explore the river and determine its usefulness as a trade route.

Army First Lieutenant Joseph Christmas Ives of the U.S. Army Corps of Topographical Engineers took on the adventure. He navigated up river using a fifty-foot long sternwheel steamboat, the Explorer. His plan was to steam up the Colorado River from the known into the unknown.

dark canyon with boat in river

Artwork from the Ives expedition was very dark, depicting the canyon as a terrifying place.

He crashed just below Black Canyon, not yet in Grand Canyon itself, but continued upriver for another thirty miles in a skiff. Continuing on foot, his overland journey took him down into the canyon at Diamond Creek, today part of the Hualapai Indian Reservation. He is thus credited as the first European American known to reach the river within Grand Canyon.

In his Report upon the Colorado River of the West; Explored in 1857 and 1858 (Washington: GPO, 1861), Ives admires the canyon's scenery:
"The extent and magnitude of the system of canyons is astounding. The plateau is cut into shreds by these gigantic chasms, and resembles a vast ruin. Belts of country miles in width have been swept away, leaving only isolated mountains standing in the gap. Fissures so profound that the eye cannot penetrate their depths are separated by walls whose thickness one can almost span, and slender spires that seem to be tottering upon their bases shoot up thousands of feet from the vaults below."

But he could not envision that the scenery alone would bring millions to view the wonder of the canyon. He also writes:
"The region is, of course, altogether valueless. It can be approached only from the south, and after entering it there is nothing to do but leave. Ours has been the first, and will doubtless be the last, party of whites to visit this profitless locality. It seems intended by nature that the Colorado river, along the greater portion of its lonely and majestic way, shall be forever unvisited and undisturbed."

Thayer's Notes:

a Joseph Ives' middle name and birthdate are from a bare genealogical entry on p65 of Arthur Coon Ives, Genealogy of the Ives Family, Including a History of the Early Settlements and the movement from Quinnipiac to the Black River Country (Watertown, NY: 1928 although © 1932). The only other passage of the book mentioning Col. Ives - to give him his Confederate Army rank - is of some length and interest:

p160 In the South we encounter a member of our family whose career seems of enough general interest to deserve special mention - Joseph Christmas, son of Ansel Wilmot and Lucia Ives, Cheshire family. We quote freely from a letter received in answer to a request for facts concerning his life:

"Lieutenant Joseph C. Ives was in charge of a party that surveyed the Grand Canyon of the Colorado, and, as a matter of record, his maps and books on that exploration trip are on file both in the hydrographic office and war department. He also explored the Everglades of Florida, making the only official and authentic maps and surveys in use" before the World War. This was done prior to his trip to the Colorado. Previous to the Civil war, Lieut. Ives had one of the most brilliant records in the U. S. Army's engineering corps. Another little known fact is that he was one of the original engineers on the Washington Monument.

"It was during the Colorado expedition that the Civil war broke out, and he left the Union army and joined the Confederate forces. He first served on General Indicates a West Point graduate and gives his Class.Robert E. Lee's staff as engineer officer, and was later taken on President p161Indicates a West Point graduate and gives his Class.Jefferson Davis' staff as chief engineer. Lieut. Ives (then Colonel Ives) planned and built the defences of Richmond, Va.

a1 "After the Civil war he drops into comparative obscurity, as he was one of the few officers who were not included in the general pardon issued by Abraham Lincoln. This technicality was due to the fact that, at the time of the outbreak of the war, he was in Colorado; and before reached his party the war had been going on for some time. He immediately sent in his resignation, which was not accepted, and he was declared a deserter. It was not until many years after his death that this was taken from his record, and he was pardoned."

Concerning his exploration of the Grand Canyon, we read that Mr. Ives first tried to enter this "mystical canyon" from the "desert below," but was driven back, "baffled and disheartened." After days of "wearisome journeyings" in an attempt to enter the canyon from above, he wrote: "This region can be approached only from the south, and after entering it there is nothing to do but to leave. Ours has been the first, and will doubtless be the last party of whites to visit this profitless locality."

The career of Lieutenant Ives was a colorful one. We are glad to record his achievements and to learn that he is buried in the Arlington Cemetery.

The book, and thus this passage of course, is in the public domain, the 1932 copyright not having been renewed in 1959 or 1960.

I've been unable to confirm that Col. Ives is indeed buried at Arlington.

b Joseph C. Ives has become famous for having written of the Grand Canyon, in his Report upon the Colorado River of the West; Explored in 1857 and 1858 (Washington, D. C., Government Printing Office, 1861), p30:

"The region . . . is, of course, altogether valueless. It can be approached only from the south, and after entering it, there is nothing to do but leave. Ours has been the first and the last party of whites to visit this profitless locality. It seems intended by nature that the Colorado River, along the greater portion of its lonely and majestic way, shall be unvisited and undisturbed."

What those who gleefully report this fail to mention is that great chunks of the same report are taken up by rapturous descriptions of the beauty of the Canyon and other landscapes of the Far West; and although some one hundred and forty million people are said to have "seen" the Grand Canyon, the vast majority of us have done so very summarily from some carefully arranged vantage point. Very few know it to any real extent, and most of it sees no human being for years on end, exactly as Lt. Ives said.

c As with other Confederate officers, Cullum's Register omits his war record. He was an aide-de-camp to President Davis, with the rank of Colonel; and it was in that capacity that - he seems to have a gift for quotability - when asked whether Robert E. Lee had the audacity required in war, he made his famous assessment of the general (Freeman, R. E. Lee, II.92). "

Charles Edward Ives (October 20, 1874 - May 19, 1954) was an American modernist[1] composer. He is one of the first American composers of international renown,[2] though Ives' music was largely ignored during his life, and many of his works went unperformed for many years. Over time, Ives came to be regarded as an "American Original".[3] Ives combined the American popular and church-music traditions of his youth with European art music, and was among the first composers to engage in a systematic program of experimental music, with musical techniques including polytonality, polyrhythm, tone clusters, aleatoric elements, and quarter tones,[4] foreshadowing many musical innovations of the 20th century.

Sources of Ives' tonal imagery are hymn tunes and traditional songs, the town band at holiday parade, the fiddlers at Saturday night dances, patriotic songs, sentimental parlor ballads, and the melodies of Stephen Foster.

Biography

Charles Ives, c. 1889

Charles Ives was born in Danbury, Connecticut in 1874,[5] the son of George Ives, a U.S. Army bandleader in the American Civil War, and his wife Mary Parmelee. A strong influence of Charles's may have been sitting in the Danbury town square, listening to his father's marching band and other bands on other sides of the square simultaneously. George Ives' unique music lessons were also a strong influence on Charles; George Ives took an open-minded approach to musical theory, encouraging his son to experiment in bitonal and polytonal harmonizations. It was from his father that Charles Ives also learned the music of Stephen Foster.[6] Ives became a church organist at the age of 14[7] and wrote various hymns and songs for church services, including his Variations on 'America' .[8]

Ives moved to New Haven in 1893, enrolling in the Hopkins School, where he captained the baseball team. In September 1894, Ives entered Yale University, studying under Horatio Parker. Here he composed in a choral style similar to his mentor, writing church music and even an 1896 campaign song for William McKinley.[9] On November 4, 1894, Charles's father died, a crushing blow to the young composer, but to a large degree Ives continued the musical experimentation he had begun with George Ives.

At Yale, Ives was a prominent figure; he was a member of HeBoule, Delta Kappa Epsilon (Phi chapter) and Wolf's Head Society, and sat as chairman of the Ivy Committee.[9] He enjoyed sports at Yale and played on the varsity football team. Michael C. Murphy, his coach, once remarked that it was a "crying shame" that Charles Ives spent so much time at music as otherwise he could have been a champion sprinter.[10] His works Calcium Light Night and Yale-Princeton Football Game show the influence of college and sports on Ives' composition. He wrote his Symphony No. 1 as his senior thesis under Parker's supervision.[9]

He continued his work as a church organist until May 1902. In 1899, he moved to employment with the insurance agency Charles H. Raymond & Co., where he stayed until 1906. In 1907, upon the failure of Raymond & Co., he and his friend Julian Myrick formed their own insurance agency Ives & Co., which later became Ives & Myrick, where he remained until he retired.[11] During his career as an insurance executive, Ives devised creative ways to structure life-insurance packages for people of means, which laid the foundation of the modern practice of estate planning.[12] His Life Insurance with Relation to Inheritance Tax, published in 1918, was well received. As a result of this he achieved considerable fame in the insurance industry of his time, with many of his business peers surprised to learn that he was also a composer. In his spare time he composed music and, until his marriage, worked as an organist in Danbury and New Haven as well as Bloomfield, New Jersey and New York City.[9]

In 1907, Ives suffered the first of several "heart attacks" (as he and his family called them) that he had throughout his lifetime. These attacks may have been psychological in origin rather than physical. Following his recovery from the 1907 attack, Ives entered into one of the most creative periods of his life as a composer.

After marrying Harmony Twitchell in 1908,[11] they moved into their own apartment in New York. He had a remarkably successful career in insurance, and continued to be a prolific composer until he suffered another of several heart attacks in 1918, after which he composed very little, writing his very last piece, the song "Sunrise", in August 1926.[11] In 1922, Ives published his 114 Songs, which represents the breadth of his work as a composer - it includes art songs, songs he wrote as a teenager and young man, and highly dissonant songs such as "The Majority."[11]

According to his wife, one day in early 1927 he came downstairs with tears in his eyes. He could compose no more, he said, "nothing sounds right."[citation needed] There have been numerous theories advanced to explain the silence of his late years, which seems as mysterious as the last several decades of the life of Jean Sibelius, who also stopped composing at almost the same time. While Ives had stopped composing, and was increasingly plagued by health problems, he did continue to revise and refine his earlier work, as well as oversee premieres of his music.[11] After continuing health problems, including diabetes, in 1930 he retired from his insurance business, which gave him more time to devote to his musical work, but he was unable to write any new music. During the 1940s he revised his Concord Sonata, publishing it in 1947 (an earlier version of the sonata and the accompanying prose volume, Essays Before a Sonata were privately printed in 1920).[13]

Ives died of a stroke in 1954 in New York City. His widow bequeathed the royalties from his music to the American Academy of Arts and Letters for the Charles Ives Prize.[14]

Music

Early period (before 1900)

As a youth, Charles was musically trained by his father George Ives, the bandmaster in Danbury, Connecticut. Charles played drums in his father's band at an early age, then learned to play piano and organ as his "main" instrument. He was a sought-after organist in some of the local churches as a teenager and once received a favorable newspaper review. George Ives engaged his son with challenging musical exercises such as alternative tunings and bitonal singing exercises. The elder Ives experimented with having two marching bands start at opposite ends of town playing two different songs in different keys while marching towards each other. Charles later credited his father as the seminal musical influence in his life.

Ives was formally trained in music at Yale. His First Symphony shows a grasp of the academic skills needed to write in the traditional sonata form of the late 19th century, as well as a tendency to display an individual and iconoclastic harmonic style. His father was a band leader, and like Hector Berlioz, Ives was fascinated with both outdoor music and instrumentation. His attempts to fuse these interests coupled with his devotion to Beethoven set the direction for the remainder of his musical life.

Ives published a large collection of his songs, many of which had piano parts that paralleled modern movements in Europe, including bitonality and pantonality. He was an accomplished pianist who could improvise in a variety of styles, including those then quite new. Though he is now best known for his orchestral music, he composed two string quartets and other works of chamber music. His work as an organist led him to write Variations on "America" in 1891, which he premiered at a recital celebrating the Fourth of July. The piece takes the tune (which is the same one as is used for the national anthem of the United Kingdom) through a series of fairly standard but witty variations; it was not published until 1949. The variations differ sharply: a running line, a set of close harmonies, a march, and a polonaise; the interludes are one of the first uses of bitonality;[15] William Schuman created an arrangement for orchestra in 1964 which was consequently transcribed for symphonic band by William E. Rhoads in 1968.

Middle period (1900-1910)

Around the turn of twentieth century Ives composed his Symphony No. 2, signifying a departure from the conservative approach of his composition teacher at Yale, Horatio Parker. His first symphony is a more conventional piece since Parker had insisted that he stick to the older European style. However, the second symphony, composed after he had graduated, adopted new techniques that included musical quotations, especially of American folk themes in the final movement, unusual phrasing and orchestration, and even a blatantly dissonant 11-note chord ending the work. The second symphony foreshadows his later compositional style even though the piece is relatively conservative by Ives' standards.

In 1906, Ives composed what some have argued was the first radical musical work of the twentieth century, Central Park in the Dark.[16] The piece evokes an evening comparing sounds from nearby nightclubs in Manhattan (playing the popular music of the day, ragtime, quoting "Hello! Ma Baby" and even Sousa's "Washington Post March") with the mysterious dark and misty qualities of the Central Park woods (played by the strings). The string harmony uses shifting chord structures that are not solely based on thirds but a combination of thirds, fourths, and fifths. Near the end of the piece the remainder of the orchestra builds up to a grand chaos ending on a dissonant chord, leaving the string section to end the piece save for a brief violin duo superimposed over the unusual chord structures.

Ives had composed two symphonies, but it is with The Unanswered Question (1906), written for the highly unusual combination of trumpet, four flutes, and string orchestra, that he established the mature sonic world that became his signature style. The strings (located offstage) play very slow, chorale-like music throughout the piece while on several occasions the trumpet (positioned behind the audience) plays a short motif that Ives described as "the eternal question of existence".[citation needed] Each time the trumpet is answered with increasingly shrill outbursts from the flutes (onstage) - apart from the last: the unanswered question. The piece is typical Ives - it juxtaposes various disparate elements, it appears to be driven by a narrative never fully revealed to the audience, and it is tremendously mysterious. It has become one of his more popular works.[17] Leonard Bernstein borrowed its title for his Charles Eliot Norton Lectures in 1973, noting that he always thought of the piece as a musical question, not a metaphysical one.

Mature period (1910-1923)

Starting around 1910 Ives began composing his most accomplished works including the Holiday Symphony and arguably his best-known piece, Three Places in New England.

Pieces such as The Unanswered Question were almost certainly influenced by the New England transcendentalist writers Ralph Waldo Emerson and Henry David Thoreau.[11] These were important influences to Ives, as he acknowledged in his Piano Sonata No. 2: "Concord, Mass., 1840-60" (1909-15), which he described as an "...impression of the spirit of transcendentalism that is associated in the minds of many with Concord, Mass., of over a half century ago... undertaken in impressionistic pictures of Emerson and Thoreau, a sketch of the Alcotts, and a scherzo supposed to reflect a lighter quality which is often found in the fantastic side of Hawthorne."[18]

The sonata is possibly Ives' best-known piece for solo piano (although it should be noted that there is an optional part for flute). (A part for viola in the "Emerson" movement is not intended for a viola player - it is simply the "viola part" from the original "Emerson" Concerto sketch, which was also to be played by bassoon and tubular bells.) Rhythmically and harmonically, it is typically adventurous, and it demonstrates Ives' fondness for quotation - on several occasions the opening motto from Beethoven's Fifth Symphony is quoted. It also contains one of the most striking examples of Ives' experimentalism: in the second movement, he instructs the pianist to use a 143?4 in (37 cm) piece of wood to produce a dense but generally very soft cluster chord. All these effects are combined to create one of the towering masterworks of 20th century piano literature-an unprecedented masterpiece of American music.

Perhaps the most remarkable piece of orchestral music Ives completed was his Fourth Symphony (1910-16). The list of forces required to perform the work alone is extraordinary. The work closely mirrors The Unanswered Question. There is no shortage of novel effects. (A tremolando is heard throughout the second movement. A fight between discordance and traditional tonal music is heard in the final movement. The piece ends quietly with just the percussion playing at a distance.) In it, Ives finally resolves all of his compositional issues and the full force of his considerable genius is heard. The final movement can be seen as an apotheosis of his work and a culmination of his musical achievement. A complete performance was not given until 1965, almost half a century after the symphony was completed, and more than a decade after Ives' death.

Ives left behind material for an unfinished Universe Symphony, which he was unable to assemble in his lifetime despite two decades of work. This was due to his health problems as well as his shifting conception of the work. There have been several attempts at completion or performing version. However, none has found its way into general performance.[19] The symphony takes the ideas in the Symphony No. 4 to an even higher level, with complex cross-rhythms and difficult layered dissonance along with unusual instrumental combinations.

Ives' chamber works include the String Quartet No. 2, where the parts are often written at extremes of counterpoint, ranging from spiky dissonance in the movement labeled "Arguments" to transcendentally slow. This range of extremes is frequent in Ives' music - crushing blare and dissonance contrasted with lyrical quiet - and carried out by the relationship of the parts slipping in and out of phase with each other. Ives' idiom, like Mahler's, employed highly independent melodic lines. It is regarded as difficult to play because many of the typical signposts for performers are not present. This work had a clear influence on Elliott Carter's Second String Quartet, which is similarly a four-way theatrical conversation.

Reception

Ives' music was largely ignored during his lifetime, particularly during the years in which he actively composed. Many of his published works went unperformed even many years after his death in 1954. But his reputation in more recent years has greatly increased. Juilliard commemorated the 50th anniversary of Ives' death by performing his music over six days in 2004. His musical experiments, including his increasing use of dissonance, were not well received by his contemporaries. Furthermore, the difficulties in performing the rhythmic complexities in his major orchestral works made them daunting challenges even decades after they were composed.

Early supporters of his music included Henry Cowell, Elliott Carter and Aaron Copland. Cowell's periodical New Music published a substantial number of Ives' scores (with the composer's approval), but for almost 40 years Ives had few performances that he did not arrange or back, generally with Nicolas Slonimsky as the conductor.[13] After seeing a copy of Ives' self-published 114 Songs during the 1930s, Copland published a newspaper article praising the collection.

Ives began to acquire some public recognition during the 1930s, with performances of a chamber orchestra version of his Three Places in New England both in the U.S. and on tour in Europe by conductor Nicolas Slonimsky and the New York Town Hall premiere of his Concord Sonata by pianist John Kirkpatrick in 1939, which led to favorable commentary in the major New York newspapers. Later, around the time of the composer's death in 1954, Kirkpatrick teamed with soprano Helen Boatwright for the first extended recorded recital of Ives' songs for the obscure Overtone label (Overtone Records catalog number 7). Boatwright and Kirkpatrick recorded a new selection of songs for the Ives Centennial Collection that Columbia Records published in 1974.

His obscurity lifted a bit in the 1940s, when he met Lou Harrison, a fan of his music who began to edit and promote it. Most notably, Harrison conducted the premiere of the Symphony No. 3, The Camp Meeting (1904) in 1946.[20] The next year, this piece won Ives the Pulitzer Prize for Music. Ives gave the prize money away (half of it to Harrison), saying "prizes are for boys, and I'm all grown up".[21] Ives himself was a great financial supporter of twentieth century music, often supporting works that were written by other composers. This he did in secret, telling his beneficiaries it was really his wife who wanted him to do so.[22] Nicolas Slonimsky said in 1971, "He financed my entire career."[23]

At this time, Ives was also promoted by Bernard Herrmann, who worked as a conductor at CBS and in 1940 became principal conductor of the CBS Symphony Orchestra. While there, he championed Ives's music. When the two met, Hermann confessed that he had tried his hand at performing the Concord Sonata. Remarkably, Ives, who actually avoided the radio and the phonograph, agreed to make a series of piano recordings from 1933 to 1943 that were later issued by Columbia Records on a special LP set issued for Ives' centenary in 1974. New World Records issued 42 tracks of Ives' recordings on CD on April 1, 2006.[24] One of the more unusual recordings, made in New York City in 1943, features Ives playing the piano and singing the words to his popular World War I song They Are There!, which he composed in 1917, then revised in 1942-43 for World War II.

Recognition of Ives's music steadily improved. He received praise from Arnold Schoenberg, who regarded him as a monument to artistic integrity, and from the New York School of William Schuman. Schoenberg's widow eventually found a note written by her husband shortly after his death (three years before Ives himself died). The note was originally written in 1944 when Schoenberg was living in Los Angeles and teaching at UCLA. It stated:

There is a great Man living in this Country - a composer. He has solved the problem how to preserve one's self-esteem and to learn [sic]. He responds to negligence by contempt. He is not forced to accept praise or blame. His name is Ives.[25]

There is a report that Ives also won the admiration of Gustav Mahler, who said that Ives was a true musical revolutionary. Reportedly, Mahler talked of premiering Ives' Third Symphony with the New York Philharmonic, but the famous composer soon died (in 1911) thus preventing the premiere. However, the source of this story is Ives; since Mahler died, there was no way to verify whether Mahler had seen the score of the symphony or decided to perform it in 1911-12 season of the New York Philharmonic.[26] However, what is true is that Ives regularly attended New York Philharmonic concerts and probably saw Mahler conduct the Philharmonic in Carnegie Hall.

In 1951, Leonard Bernstein conducted the world premiere of Ives' Second Symphony in a broadcast concert by the New York Philharmonic. The Iveses heard the performance on their cook's radio and were amazed at the audience's warm reception to the music. Bernstein continued to conduct Ives' music and made a number of recordings with the Philharmonic for Columbia Records. He even honored Ives on one of his televised youth concerts and in a special disc included with the reissue of the 1960 recording of the second symphony and the Fourth of July movement from Ives' Holiday Symphony.

Another pioneering Ives recording, undertaken during the 1950s, was the first complete set of the four violin sonatas, performed by Cleveland Orchestra concertmaster Rafael Druian and John Simms. Leopold Stokowski took on Symphony No. 4 in 1965, regarding the work as "the heart of the Ives problem". The Carnegie Hall world premiere by the American Symphony Orchestra led to the first recording of the music. Another promoter of Ives was choral conductor Gregg Smith, who made a series of recordings of the composer's shorter works during the 1960s, including first stereo recordings of the psalm settings and arrangements of many short pieces for theater orchestra. The Juilliard String Quartet recorded the two string quartets during the 1960s.

Today, conductor Michael Tilson Thomas is an enthusiastic exponent of Ives' symphonies as is composer and biographer Jan Swafford. Ives' work is regularly programmed in Europe. Ives has also inspired pictorial artists, most notably Eduardo Paolozzi, who entitled one of his 1970s sets of prints Calcium Light Night, each print being named for an Ives' piece (including Central Park in the Dark). In 1991, Connecticut's legislature designated Ives as that state's official composer.[27]

The Scottish baritone Henry Herford began a survey of Ives' songs in 1990, but this remains incomplete because the record company involved (Unicorn-Kanchana) collapsed. Pianist-composer and Wesleyan University professor Neely Bruce has made a life's study of Ives. To date, he has staged seven parts of a concert series devoted to the complete songs of Ives. Musicologist David Gray Porter reconstructed a piano concerto, the "Emerson" Concerto, from Ives' sketches. A recording of the work was released by Naxos Records.

Compositions

Main article: List of compositions by Charles Ives

Note: Because Ives often made several different versions of the same piece, and because his work was generally ignored during his lifetime, it is often difficult to put exact dates on his compositions. The dates given here are sometimes best guesses. There have also been controversial speculations that Ives purposely misdated his own pieces earlier or later than actually written.

Variations on America for organ (1892)
The Circus Band (a march describing the Circus coming to town)
Psalm settings (14, 42, 54, 67, 90, 135, 150) (1890s)[28]

String Quartet No. 1, From the Salvation Army (1897-1900)
Symphony No. 1 in D minor (1898-1901)
Symphony No. 2 (Ives gave dates of 1899-1902; analysis of handwriting and manuscript paper suggests 1907-1909)[29]
Symphony No. 3, The Camp Meeting (1908-10)
Central Park in the Dark for chamber orchestra (1906, 1909)
The Unanswered Question for chamber group (1906; rev. 1934)
Piano Sonata No. 1 (1909-16)
Piano Trio (c1909-10, rev. c1914-15)
Violin Sonata No. 1 (1910-14; rev. ca. 1924)
Violin Sonata No. 4, Children's Day at the Camp Meeting (1911-16)
A Symphony: New England Holidays (1904-1913)
"Robert Browning" Overture (1911-14)
Symphony No. 4 (1912-18; rev. 1924-26)
String Quartet No. 2 (1913-15)
Pieces for chamber ensemble grouped as "Sets," some called Cartoons or Take-Offs or Songs Without Voices (1906-18); includes Calcium Light Night
Three Places in New England (Orchestral Set No. 1) (1910-14; rev. 1929)
Violin Sonata No. 2 (1914-17)
Violin Sonata No. 3 (1914-17)
Orchestral Set No. 2 (1915-19)
Piano Sonata No. 2, Concord, Mass., 1840-60 (1916-19) (revised many times by Ives)
Universe symphony (incomplete, 1915-28, worked on symphony until his death in 1954)
114 Songs (composed various years 1887-1921, published 1922.)
Three Quarter Tone Piano Pieces (1923-24)
Orchestral Set No. 3 (incomplete, 1919-26, notes added after 1934)

Ives proposed in 1920 that there be a 20th Amendment to the US Constitution. The amendment would authorize citizens to submit legislative proposals to Congress. Members of Congress would then cull the proposals, selecting 10 each year as referendums for popular vote by the nation's electorate. He even had printed at his own expense several thousand copies of a pamphlet on behalf of his proposed amendment. The pamphlet proclaimed the need to curtail "THE EFFECTS OF TOO MUCH POLITICS IN OUR representative DEMOCRACY." His proposal joined his music in being ignored during his lifetime.

A fistful of dollars: how the Charles Ives House was sold
September 19, 2012 By Norman Lebrecht

We have received the inside working of the transaction from one of the activists who worked, with great dedication and in close cooperation with the local authorities, to save the house for posterity.

It has been sold by the composer’s heritage-proof grandson to a weekender couple who intend, it is understood, to knock it down and replace it with a customised modern dwelling for their leisure and opleasure. petition to persuade Mr Tyler to think again has gather close to 1,000 signatures. It appears that the vendor needed an instant cash deal.

Here are the grim details:

About two weeks ago, the Charles Ives Society, the Town of Redding and the Redding Land Trust jointly offered US $1.32 million for the Ives House, which has been listed with real estate broker Paul Lutz of Coldwell Banker (Paul.Lutz@coldwellbankermoves.com) for an asking price of $1.5 million since sometime in 2011.

The offer was rejected by Charles Ives Tyler, the owner of the Ives House (the composer's grandson), which motivated the Ives Society buyers' group to increase its offer to $1.52 million, $20,000 MORE than the asking price.

This higher offer from the Ives Society was also rejected last week, with the broker informing them that Mr. Tyler had instead accepted a cash offer (i.e. no mortgage contingency) from a family who wants to use the residence as a weekend home.

It is not clear how much the family has agreed to pay for the House, although we believe that one of the reasons Tyler (and the broker) preferred the private party transaction was that it could be consummated more quickly.

Art Cummings: Home and legacy of Charles Ives deserve to be preserved
Published 3:12 p.m., Saturday, September 29, 2012
Volunteers grateful for opportunityPage 1 of 1
Just a few short weeks ago, there was good reason to believe that the Redding home of Charles Ives -- America's greatest classical composer -- would be sold to parties interested in preserving the property for posterity.

Today, however, those hopes have dimmed.

According to local and national preservation officials, the property's owner -- Charles Ives Tyler, grandson of the legendary composer -- prefers to sell the brown-shingled house, red barn, cottage and land on Umpawaug Road to a private buyer.

That is indeed disappointing news.

Ives was born in Danbury in 1874 and lived his first 20 years in the city. But he spent more than four decades at his Redding home, where he wrote some of his greatest works.

Given Ives' status as a giant of American musical history, his legacy -- and his home -- deserve to be preserved. To their credit, the town of Redding, the Redding Land Trust and the Charles Ives Society have collaborated in a good-faith effort to purchase the property and preserve the Ives legacy.

And upon hearing of Tyler's decision to sell to a private party, a music professor at the University of New Hampshire has started a petition drive to convince Tyler to change his mind.

In fairness, the property belongs to Tyler, and he can sell it to whomever he wishes.

But it would be a good thing -- some would say the right thing -- for Tyler to rethink things and sell the property to groups that would preserve it and his grandfather's legacy.

It might be useful for Tyler to consider the recent history of the home and studio of Winslow Homer -- the great American landscape and seascape artist -- on Prouts Neck in Scarborough, Maine.

That seaside property is where Homer lived and worked from the mid-1880s until his death in 1910 and where he painted many of his finest works.

After his death, the property was passed down through the family and ultimately to Homer's great-grandnephew, Charles "Chip" Homer Willauer, who several years ago decided to sell it to a group that would preserve it and the legacy of Winslow Homer.

Willauer sold the property in 2006 to the Portland Museum of Art, which undertook a multi-year, multi-million-dollar renovation and restoration of the three-room home and studio.

Just this past week, the home/studio was made available for public tours in conjunction with the opening of an exhibition, "Weatherbeaten: Winslow Homer and Maine."

Wouldn't it be wonderful if a similar scenario could someday take place at the Charles Ives home in Redding?

Hopefully, Charles Ives Tyler will reconsider his apparent decision to sell to a private buyer and instead allow the parties interested in preservation to purchase the property.

If that does not happen, hopefully the new owner will truly respect what he or she has acquired and will treat the property accordingly.

And hopefully the new owner will be willing to work out some sort of arrangement with local and national officials to ensure that the property and legacy of Charles Ives are preserved for posterity.

Health Problems
In 1918, Ives suffered a severe heart attack, and he never fully recovered from it, despite the fact that he would live many more years. In retrospect, Ives probably also suffered from diabetes. Most likely, this disease was the underlying cause of the heart attack and many other maladies that Ives continued to experience for the remainder of his life. As Swafford points out, Ives' poor health led to focus on two new priorities:

Ives' health began to fail in 1927. Cataracts over both eyes were inoperable because of his heart condition. Diabetes also added to health problem.
Ives retired from business in 1930 because of his ill-health

His health began to deteriorate in 1905, and in 1906, at the age of 32, he had the first of three heart attacks.

Ives saw his health continue to deteriorate, and in 1918 he had a second heart attack.

spent the last 28 years of his life overseeing performances of his work, dictating biographical notes to a secretary, reworking old compositions, and battling illness. He suffered another heart attack in 1938.

In 1918 he suffered a massive heart attack, complicated by a diabetic condition, and was compelled to curtail his work both in business and in music to a minimum because his illness made it difficult to handle a pen.

Then suddenly the creative flow was stopped. One month before the end of the war in 1918 he had a serious breakdown whose exact nature seems hard to determine; it is generally described as a physical illness and he never seems to have really recovered.

From: http://www.charlesives.org/02bio.htm

Two more things of great significance happened to Ives in 1906, one ominous and the other fruitful. After living since childhood at a near-manic pace--what allowed him to compose voluminously despite working full-time in an office--Ives had a physical breakdown, probably a heart attack and associated depression. Also that year he began to court a settlement-house nurse named Harmony Twichell, daughter of a well-known Hartford minister. Charlie had met her during his Yale years--she was the sister of a school friend--but their romance did not kindle until a decade later. After a long Victorian courtship, during which they found a transforming spiritual rapport, Charles and Harmony were married in June 1908. Between them they created a kind of theology around their relationship, seeing their love as a reflection of divine love, his music their means of spreading that love into the world. After years of prophetic experiments, Ives's full maturity can be dated from his marriage to Harmony Twichell.

Additional information for David Ives:
http://www.jenongen.com/search/label/Ives --
" One such case is that of David Ives, oldest son of my ancestor Allen Ives and his wife Mary Deeter. Years ago, when a large proportion of my efforts were dependent upon the U.S. Postal Service, I exchanged information with another researcher, and was sent a voluminous binder. This consisted largely of printed, typewritten sketches about each individual. The Ives family was part of the project. David Ives' biography stated, word for word, about his death: "He died November 22, 1899. (?) He died in a sandslide. (It's possible he may have died in CA.)"

However it got there, this date has found its way onto many online trees; the few I glanced at don't have a source for the information. Most state that David Ives died in Kansas, where he lived at the time of the 1880 census, working as a blacksmith in Jewell County. What may not be known to many, is that there was a footnote to the biography. It states that David Ives left Kansas in 1883 with his brother Levi (Lee) Ives, eventually settling in Washington Territory. The location would eventually be called Pateros. Records for the David Ives I'm related to show his birth to have occurred in Iowa, in 1853.

There begins the part of the story where we have to question the time and circumstances of David's death. The Washington Territorial census of 1887 shows a David Ives, age 33, blacksmith, living in Walla Walla. No other family members are shown, although he had married, and was the father of two children. His birth is recorded as having taken place in Pennsylvania. After this point, this David doesn't appear to be creating any more records in Washington.

Jumping ahead to 1888 and 1890, a David Ives, age 35 (in both entries), blacksmith, is living in Chico, Butte Co., California. Birthplace is shown as Iowa. This is from the Great Registers, which record voters, in all parts of the state. The last entry in 1892 shows a David Ives, age 39, blacksmith, living in Santa Rosa, Sonoma Co., CA. Birthplace is Pennsylvania.

The final piece of the puzzle was located in an online image of an article, which appeared in the San Francisco Chronicle newspaper of 21 February 1893. It reports the death of a man presumed to be David Ives of Santa Rosa (located two counties away), because of the letter found on his person. It's from a niece in Kansas named "Lena." A snippet view of the same news from the San Francisco Call newspaper from February 22 states the victim was "David Ives, blacksmith, of Santa Rosa."

Additional information for Charles Abrastus Ives:

From: http://jenongen.blogspot.com/search/label/Ives --

" One of the interesting stories I heard at my grandmother's knee, was about the year her father, Charles A. Ives, became inspired to be a pioneer, one more time. He decided to investigate re-settling in a whole new country: Canada. Many of his children were adults by this time, and perhaps he'd heard about new opportunities, or the area around him in rural Washington was becoming "too crowded." Whatever the reason, he actually pursued the idea, and off he went. One of his daughters, Margarita "Dutch" Ives, who was an older teenager at the time, spent a few months with her father in Duchess, Alberta, Canada, keeping house for him. Moving away from her family and friends to an unfamiliar location, probably wasn't the adventure she'd pictured for herself after finishing high school! I also get the impression that my 15-year-old grandmother enjoyed a much greater degree of freedom with her father away, driving herself around in the family's Ford, and getting up to who knows what! The Church of the Brethren, of which she was a member, would not have approved.

The shifting array of online digitized records shines a light on Charley's plan. From the record set at Ancestry.com, called Border Crossings: From U.S. to Canada, 1908-1935, we are lucky enough to see an actual image of Form 30, which is an individual entry form. This has much more detail than a simple passenger list. We learn that he entered Canada on the train at Kingsgate, on March 26, 1919. He was a 52-year-old farmer from Centralia, Washington, born at Marshalltown, Iowa. Although he lists his race as "Scotch," that's probably debatable.

Charley Ives must have been resolute in his plan; he traveled with $5,000. There is a column that asks, "if settler, value of effects." I'm not sure whether that meant land already purchased, livestock, equipment, or a combination, but it was worth $3175. One of the first questions asked was, "Object in coming to Canada." His answer? "To settle."

However, Charley hadn't planned on one thing, his wife, Mary Catherine, or "Katie" was equally resolved to stay right where she was. They had a beautiful farm on Ford's Prairie, in Centralia, Washington, and her circle of family and friends was close by. As the story was told to me, this sweet, kind woman, who had six living children, had had enough. She said, "Charley, I've followed you from Kansas to Pateros (Washington), from Washington to California, and from California back to Washington. I AM NOT FOLLOWING YOU TO CANADA!"

Perhaps Charles Ives' time in Canada wasn't what he'd expected; most likely he decided not to test his wife. In any case, he lived out a peaceful existence in Washington for the remainder of his life. At the time of her death in 1952, they had been married for 64 years. He died in 1954."

(Per Sarah Elizabeth Trimble, "In the terrible havoc, [Elizabeth] the oldest daughter had been burned so badly that she died." It's not clear what the "havoc" was. Eliz died after Jan 1881 (birth of son Amzy) & 4 Nov 1883 (Byron's 2nd marriage date).[17519] Lord Byron Ives married second Mary Jane Comer in Independence, Arkansas on 4 November 1883.[17520] She was the daughter of Mathew Raiford and Dianna Mason (Bales) Comer, born at Weaver Chapel, Independence, Arkansas on 8 September 1867,[17521] and she died at Batesville on 5 September 1936.[17522] Lord Byron Ives married third Laura S. She was born in Arkansas.[17523]

Additional information for Lord Byron Ives:
From: http://boards.ancestry.co.uk/thread.aspx?mv=flat&m=21837&p=surnames.smith --

"I am looking for George Smith of Michigan. He was in the 1870 census in Plainfield, Kent county. He had a border named Byron Ives 18 years old. He was also in the 1860 censes and Byron was still liveing with him.Byron is my gggrandfather and for some reason his parents are gone.My email adress is jcummings@neo.rr.com . thank you and happy hunting. Jim"

"Don't know how much this will help, but Mrs. Huldah A. Ives married George Smith in Wayne County in 1859.

In the 1860 census George Smith's wife is listed as H.A.. In 1870 she is listed as Ann. So it is a pretty safe bet that Huldah A. is Huldah Ann.

That means that George Smith is the stepfather of Byron and Charles Ives. The Older Smith children are by Georges first marriage and any children born after are the children of George and Huldah.

Huldah was born in Canada. You might try looking there."

The funeral of the late C.D. Ives, son of C.J. Ives, announcement of whose death was made in last evening's Gazette, will be held tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock, with services at the Ives home, 820 First avenue, and conducted by Dr. Thomas E. Green of Grace Episcopal church and Dr. E.R. Burkhalter of the First Presbyterian church.

Charles Dale Ives was born in Linn county in 1857, and spent most of his boyhood in Burlington. He came to Cedar Rapids in 1872 and had resided here most of the time since. For a number of years he was general freight agent of the B., C. R. & N. road. He had been ill at St. Luke's hospital for several weeks and his condition began to grow worse on Sunday last and from that time on he rapidly failed, being unconscious most of the time since then till the end came. He leaves a wife and two little daughters. Besides the father mentioned he is also survived by a sister, Mrs. W.W. Douglas. The burial will be in the family tomb in Oak Hill. The deceased was a man of strong intellect, companiable qualities and most generous instincts.

__A Sudden Death. - Wednesday afternoon of last week, Mrs. C. D. Ives died very suddenly. Her health had not been good for some time, but had improved very considerably recently and no thought of death being near was had two hours before she died. Her husband was absent, at the time of her death, having gone to Peoria, Ill., the preceeding evening. Less than two years ago the TIMES announced the marriage of Miss Rock and Mr. C. D. Ives, and it is with feelings of deep sorrow that we record her death. She grew from childhood to womanhood in our midst, was highly accomplished, and the young couple started in life under most auspicious circumstances and with a bright future. But this sad, and seemingly untimely death of our loving wife casts a gloom not only over the household, but wide and deep into the hearts and homes of a large circle of relatives and friends. The death of one so young is always sad, but it brings a peculiar sadness, deep, heavy and painful, when it falls so suddenly and unexpectedly as in this case. She was buried Friday afternoon, from Grace Episcopal church.
